A SUBSCRIPTION book-house in Philadelphia is sending out a circular letter to the trade warning them that in buying and selling one of their publications "they are doing so in fraud of their rights and contrary to law." One of our readers referring to this circular asks "What are the booksellers generally to do about it?" If it is a fact, as has been widely claimed by the trade, that there is no money in handling subscription-books, we hope booksellers will gratify subscription-bookhouses in general, and this firm in particular, by letting their wares alone. Giving them the cold shoulder even to the extent of not working off their "plugs" would be about the worst thing we imagine that could happen to some subscription-book publishers.

THE decision in the John A. Wilson case has excited no little indignation in the trade-and justly so. The two books which Wilson sent through the mails-Balzac's "Contes Drolatiques" and the "Heptameron," may not belong to the kind of literature that may be recommended for the perusal of the immature, but they are among the well-known works of literature and may to-day be found in over half the book-stores of this country. It is, to say the least, preposterous to class these books with the kind of literature intended to be prohibited by law, and if they are to be shut out from the mails on the score of decency it will be hard to say where dictation and persecution in this direction will stop! But it may be, as one of our contemporaries suggests, "that Wilson conducted his business with especial reference to piquing a prurient curiosity. He may have so advertised these books as to get a sale for them as forbidden literature. If that were the case, he was, of course, morally guilty; but to send a man to prison simply for selling the 'Heptameron' and the works of Balzac is a startling use of the law. Why, to be consistent. we should be obliged to condemn to the flames a great part of the books in nearly every public and private library."

ENGLISH AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS.

From the London Times, March 3.

The first of a series of conferences arranged by the committee of the Incorporated Society of Authors was held yesterday at Willis's Rooms. The subject of yesterday's conference was "The Maintenance of Literary Property." Lord Lytton presided, and the conference was opened by Mr. Walter Besant. There was a large audience, among those present being Lord Brabourne, Sir Francis Adams, Mr. Bret Harte, Professor C. B. Dicey, Mr. Edmund Gosse, Professor Max Muller, the Rev. James Martineau, the Earl of Pembroke, Sir Frederick Pollock, Sir Henry Thompson, Mr. Thomas Hardy, and Mr. R. D. Blackmore.

The chairman, in opening the proceedings, said with reference to international copyright with America that, while America possessed a very large reading public with a very small writing public, the American publishers were agreed in the opinion that the piracy of English works was a very profitable branch of business. But America had now developed a very considerable literature of her own, and for this and other reasons that business was ceasing to be so very remunerative to the American publishers. He thought, therefore, that in those circumstances there was much reason for hopefulness that the continued efforts which would be made by that society to obtain for American as well as for English authors rights in their own property on both sides of the Atlantic would at last be crowned with success.

Mr. Walter Besant, who was received with cheers, said, in the course of his paper on "The Security of Literary Property," that the publishers were the administrators of the great literary property created by the authors and had a perfect right to payment for their services. It would be most unjust in consideration of the honorable men engaged in the work of publishing to attack them. At the same time it would be folly to disguise the truth, which was that the relations between author and publisher were at the present moment most unsatisfactory. They had always been strained; the increase and development of literary trade only made this strain felt more keenly; there was no other calling at which so many epigrams had been hurled as the calling of publisher, not even that of king, pope, or minister; there was no workman so discontented with his pay as the author; there was none so jealous and suspicious of his treatment; there was no kind of work which had caused so much disappointment as literary work. The Society of Authors was founded partly in the hope of finding some remedy for that state of things. Hitherto they had confined their efforts to special cases, interfering for the protection of authors who had come to them with a grievance, real or imaginary. It was now felt, however, that the tinkering of individual cases was but a small thing compared with general principles.

The question which was put before them now for the first time was-What proportion of the results from the sale of a book should be retained by the publisher in payment of his services for producing a book in the publishing of which there is no risk? In endeavoring to answer that question they must consider some of the various systems of publishing now practiced. They resolved themselves into four principal methods: (1) that where the publisher bought the book right out; (2) that of half profits; (3) that of a royalty; (4) that the first, nothing could be said except that one who sold his book would do well first to consult the society as to the price offered. (2) The system of half profits was an old-fashioned method, by which the publisher relieved the author of all risks and promised him half the profits. The plan had fallen into disfavor owing to the custom of making a secret profit on the cost of production. He would illustrate the practice by asking a question—What would be said in the city if, when two men had agreed on sharing the profits of an enterprise, the one who kept the books were to make a secret profit for himself by setting down the expenses as greater than those actually incurred? It was not half the profits that the author received by that arrangement, but a quarter, or none at all, or anything that his publisher chose, because he could charge exactly what he pleased. This state of things had arisen because, in rendering their accounts, publishers had never submitted vouchers nor had authors demanded a scrutiny That he might not be accused of for the books. extravagance, he would tell one anecdote. A young writer had a manuscript which he was anxious to publish. He went to a publisher and offered it. He was presently told that the house would not take the risk but that they would publish it for him if he would do so; that it would cost £120, which he was to lay down, besides the advertisements, which were to come out of the sale of the book; and that the house would take for their trouble 15 per cent. commission on all the sales. Fortunately, before signing the agreement and paying the money, he took the advice of the society and was recommended to get a separate estimate from a printer. The cost of production by that estimate was £65. They would observe how the method of secrecy there enabled the publisher to put nearly 100 per cent. on the actual cost of production, besides 15 per cent. on the sales. What success would make a book so loaded at the outset remunerative to the author? (3) The system of the royalty. Here again, he would give an illustration. It was that of one of the volumes which were sold for 6s. apiece. He meant such a volume as contained about the amount of matter of a single-volume novel. That book cost to produce, binding and all, about 1s. 6d. The publisher received 4s. a copy. If he gave his author a tenth royalty, which was about 712d. a copy, he had for himself 2s. profit on every copy. If he gave his author 20 per cent., which was fabulous generosity, he paid 1s. 6d. for the production, 1s. 2d. to his author, and kept is. 4d. for himself. Supposing that 10,000 copies were sold. The publisher, on the 10 per cent. royalty, made a profit of £1000 to the author's £312; and on the 20 per cent. plan the publisher made a profit of £666, and the author of £604. It would almost seem as if they were better off under the old-fashioned half-profits system. With such improvement on this royalty system as a deferred royalty, to begin after so many copies were sold and so forth, he would not waste their time. Under the system adopted in France, where the recognition of literary property, as well as of authors, had always been much more just and generous than here, he believed the position of the author was three times as good as it was here under a 10 per cent. royalty. (4) The method of publication on commission, by which the publisher professed simply to charge 15 per cent. on all sales. Fairly and honestly carried out there was no better arrangement. Unfortunately, there was prevalent of publishing by commission. (1) With regard to the suspicion that not only did the publisher make a profit on the cost of production, but also that he did not push a commission book so vigorously as those which were his own by right of purchase, or which he published on advantageous

There was much to be said by publishers on their own behalf. But after all that might be said for or against them, it remained certain that they must be paid for their services, and that a book had a much better chance in good than it had in bad hands. He thought that authors would be ready to adopt the French system with certain modifications. They would then receive a royalty of one-third the published price—i. c., the price actually paid by the public. In order to insure that the publisher should be paid for his labor, a fee, the amount to be agreed on, should be charged on the book, to come out of the publisher's profits beyond the actual cost of produc-The fee, he thought, should never exceed There should be no secret profits of any £50. kind. The books concerning the sale of the work should be open to the author, and every account rendered should be duly audited and the vouchers produced. Before parting with his manuscript the author would have an agreement properly drawn up, containing clauses binding the publisher against secret profits of every kind, and another enabling him to retain control over his property and in case of disagreement to remove it into other hands. That seemed to be the outcome of the knowledge acquired by the society during its two years of active work. not expect the plan to be immediately adopted, but it would commend itself gradually.

THE BOOK-TRADE IN ANCIENT ROME.

From Rooklove

IT is the generally received opinion that before the introduction of movable type by Füst, publishing was hampered with almost insuperable difficulties. This is true so far as the Middle Ages were concerned, because during that benighted era very few people knew one letter from another. Learning in those days was almost entirely in the hands of the monks, and what few books were produced issued in all cases from some one or other of the numerous monasteries scattered throughout Europe. Books were rare because readers were few; had there been a greater demand, we doubt not but that the supply would have kept pace with it.

It is quite a mistake, however, to compare for any purpose the state of learning as it existed in Europe during the Middle Ages with the widespread knowledge which prevailed in ancient times, more especially in the palmy days of Rome, and any similarity that may appear between the two takes its origin from an imperfect acquaintance with the habits and customs of the Roman people.

There were, in truth, publishing-houses in the time of Augustus which may almost be said to have rivalled the great firms of our own day; and not only was this the case in point of enterprise, but even of cheapness as well. We cannot of course venture to place copying on a level with printing, for the great advantage of the latter process is, that once clear the "proof" of mistakes, and no error can well occur, no matter how many copies may be struck off from the type. With mere copying it is different; any one of the transcribers may make a mistake at any moment, and in the aggregate these may amount to a considerable detect. The defectiveness of ancient texts has given constant employment and cause of quarrel to modern commentators; hence the great disadvantage of manuscript lies in the fact that the text is just as likely as not to be corrupt.

Apart from this, however, and putting the question of legibility on one side, copying has many advantages in its favor. In the first place, it is quicker, for no compositor can possibly keep pace with a transcriber; and secondly, it is, under certain conditions, much cheaper.

Labor is in these days a somewhat expensive commodity; but in Rome, where the existence of slavery was expressly recognized as an integral portion of the Jus Gentium, the case was widely different. Although slavery under the various modifications of that law was quite a different institution from that, for example, which existed in the United States before the war of 1863, still its existence enabled a person possessed of means to accomplish any particular work he had on hand very much more quickly and cheaply than he could possibly hope to do at the present day.

Suppose, for instance, a London publisher were asked how soon he would undertake to turn out a thousand copies of the second book of Martial's "Epigrams," consisting of 540 lines of verse, he would reply that, assuming he stopped the work of his establishment to do it, and also assuming that he could induce his printers to put on every available compositor in their service, he might get the matter completed in six hours. We much doubt whether the work could be finished in a much shorter time than this; but, to be on the safe side, we will say that he replies that, by the expenditure of money in profusion, it could be done at a pinch in three hours.

We can imagine what a hurrying here and there, what a rush of extra compositors, machine hands, and other workmen there would be; what a number of binders ready to receive the printed sheets directly they came from the press; what a wasteof money, what turmoil and confusion! And when at last the printed book made its appearance, full of mistakes in all probability, and doubtless blurred and smeared with the undried ink, the modern Lucullus, who had ordered this feat to be accomplished, would doubtless exclaim: Wonderful, most wonderful! even in this age of perfecting machines and printers' devils.

Let us now turn to Rome, and step into the warehouse of Atticus, or the Sosii, the great publishers of the Augustan era, and ask either of them a similar question. They, too, would have to put aside all other work; but assuming they agree to do this, the thousand copies of the second book of the "Epigrams," with its 540 lines of verse, would be in the customer's hands bound and endorsed in an hour, and at very little extra cost.

We cannot doubt this, for we have the authority of Martial himself. His words are explicit, and intended to be so, and are not merely used as a figure of speech. "Hæc una peragit librarius hora" (Epig. ii. 1).

The great firm of the Sosii had over 2000 slaves, trained as transcribers, under their immediate control, and doubtless a large number of binders and readers as well. Immediately on this order being given, the latter would read through various portions of the text, and the edition would easily be copied and stitched in an hour. Thus it would have been possible to beat the London publisher by two hours out of three; or, to make everything absolutely certain, give the Roman two hours, and he would beat him by one. We ventnumber, and be, moreover, exceedingly difficult to ure to say also that the mistakes would be about equal in both cases, while the difference in cost would be very greatly in favor of the older method.

Again, let us go to the London publisher and ask him at how much per copy he could supply and leisurely turn out an edition of the thirteenth book of Martial's "Epigrams," assuming there were a brisk demand for the work. Suppose he said 2000 copies at sixpence each, would that be con-sidered an excessive price? We think not; but for all that the Sosii would not ask so much; for again, on the authority of Martial, we learn that a copy of his thirteenth book of "Epigrams" might be bought from the booksellers, who were a distinct class from the publishers as they now are, for the equivalent of a little over fivepence.

This excessive promptness and cheapness shows conclusively that there must have been a very large demand for books in the time of the Romans, and when we come to look into the authorities we find that such was actually the Examples might be multiplied to show that the ramification of the Roman bookselling trade stretched into every part of the civilized globe, even into our own country of Britain, where Martial and Ovid, Virgil, Cæsar, Propertius, and the rest were as well known among a small class, as in Italy they were read and digested by the masses.

Books were to the Roman an absolute necessity and, as is the case in our own day, there were bad books as well as good ones in profusion. Thus it is related that Augustus, once making a raid on the pseudo-Sibylline literature, succeeded in discovering no less than 2000 copies of this spurious publication in Rome alone. How many remained hidden it is impossible to say, but probably three or four times that number, since the stationarii, with their eyes on the market, would know well that when the heat of the raid was over the value of the surviving copies would increase

There were bibliophiles also in Rome, ever anxious to snap up rare originals at almost any price, as indeed there were in Greece as well, where Plato paid a hundred Attic minæ (more than £300) for three small treatises of Philolaus the Pythagorean. And as there were bibliophiles so also were there bibliomaniacs in profusion, for towards the end of the Republic it became the fashion to have a library as part of the household furniture, and the booksellers carried on a flourishing trade in their shops in the Argeltum and the Vicus Sandalarius, where they exhibited catalogues on the side-posts of their doors, as their modern prototypes in Holywell Street do now, and as Maunsell first did in London in 1595. Seneca ridicules the prevailing mania for bookcollecting in men who, as he says, knew nothing of their possessions except the outsides.

Such is a bare outline of the state of the booktrade in ancient Rome; an outline though necessarily meagre, is still, it is to be hoped, sufficient to show that literature was held in as high repute many hundreds of years ago as it is now. The modern system of publishing in all its branches is indeed almost precisely the same; even the destination of the books themselves is the same, for Horace relates that if an author failed to please in the metropolis, his works were foisted on the provinces; and if this were of no avail, the "remainders" were sold to the proprietors of pastry and spice shops for paper,

An elaborate attack on Mr. Rider Haggard appears in The Pall-Mall Gazette, which accuses the author of "She" of plagiarism on a large scale from Thomas Moore's "Epicurean."

UNDER the title "Annali Tipografici Aldini" Signor G. Manzoni is about to publish the first volume of a work in which he intends to make use of all the accessible documents bearing on the famous printers of Venice.

GENERAL TROCHU, Governor of Paris during the Franco-Prussian war, is going to publish his reminiscences of that exciting time. eral lives at present in the greatest retirement at Tours, only visiting two friends, one of whom is an ex-Chamberlain of the late Emperor Napoleon and the other a Carlist chief.

MR. ROBERT BUCHANAN is preparing for early publication an original series of prose and verse compositions to be issued under the general title of "Latter Day Leaves." Each portion would be complete in itself, and published at a low price, with illustrations. The first "leaf" will be called "Thro' the Dark City," and will be illustrated by Mr. Peter Macnab.

JOURNALISTIC NOTES.

GEORGE R. HALM has severed his connection with the Decorator and Furnisher.

WE are pleased to learn that the ably-edited Delineator, issued by the Butterick Publishing Co., N. Y., has reached a circulation of 175,000 subscribers.

TWENTY-ONE American composers write to the April Century in favor of international copyright. It will be remembered that a similar group of "Open Letters" from American authors was published in The Century for February, 1886.

THE first number of the American Journal of Psychology, edited by G. Stanley Hall, Professor of Psychology and Pedagogics in the Johns Hopkins University, is now in active prepara-tion. The journal will be issued quarterly by the university, through its publication agency.

THE complete novel in the April Lippincott's will be "Douglas Duane," by Edgar Fawcett. It is described as a weird and strange tale in the vein which Stevenson and Rider Haggard are working so effectually. Mr. Fawcett himself thinks it one of the best things he has ever done.

On March 17, the first number of a weekly literary and dramatic paper called The Tatler, wil be published at Indianapolis under the editoria charge of Margaret Holmes, author of "The Chamber Over the Gate," recently published by C. A. Bates. It is the aim of its publishers to make it the leading literary paper in the West.

DR. WILLIAM A. HAMMOND, than whom there is no better authority, will open the April Popular Science Monthly with an able article entitled "Brain-Forcing in Childhood." The paper gives a vivid picture of the evils of the book-cramming process, now so common in both public and private schools, and also contains a strong ple for fewer studies, more direct contact with Na ture, and less of the intervention of books.

Mr. Thomas Stevens, after successfully completing his famous journey around the world on a bicycle, has quietly settled down to his editorial duties as manager of the bicycling department of Outing. He has also become a shareholder and one of the directors of the company. It is said that the whole of the capital stock of the Outing Company is owned by the editorial and business held by any outsider.

Dr. Thomas Hunter, President of the Normal College of the City of New York, will have an article on Novel-Reading by girls, in The Epoch of next Friday, March 18th. He asked the female students, "Who is your favorite author, and what books did you read during the summer President Hunter states that the answers received, which will be given in The Epoch, "reveal certain facts which parents and teachers should carefully consider."

[&]quot;Great things, 'tis said, from small beginnings spring,
But not unless they greatly were conceived;
The mighty oak, as poets sing,
Was but a seed the genial soil received.

But nobly, too, they must be carried out:

No niggard hand may rear the tender shoot;

From winter's icy breath, from summer's drought, The gard'ner must protect both stem and root;

Must tend and watch it with a mother's care, Supply the needful moisture and the heat, If thrive it shall and grow up strong and fair, Diffusing far and wide its perfume sweet.
'Tis such has been your work, with blessing's crown'd,
Which makes the name of Tauchnitz world-renown'd.

Messrs, TICKNOR & COMPANY announce for publication, on Saturday, March 19, 1887:

DUE NORTH.

By MATURIN M. BALLOU, author of "Due South," "Due West," "Edge-tools of Speech," "Genius in Sunshine and Shadow," etc. I vol., 12mo, $1.50.

This admirable work, by one of the most skilful and vigorous of American authors records the singular experiences and interesting sights of a recent journey through Norway, Sweden, Russia, and other Northern countries of ences and interesting signification a term journey.

Mr. Ballou's previous travel-books have had an immense popular success, which will doubtless be repeated in this picturesque and vivid record of his recent travels and observations in Russia and Scandinavia. Beginning with two brilliant chapters on Copenhagen; it contains attractive accounts of the Swedish and Norwegian capitals, Stockholm and Christiania; chapters devoted to Bergen and Trondhjem; the Loffodens and Maelström; the North Cape and Midnight Sun; Lapland and Finland; St. Petersburg and Moscow; the Neva and Volga; Nijni-Norgorod; Warsaw and Russian Poland.

TWO GENTLEMEN OF BOSTON.

A Novel. 1 vol., 12mo, $1.50.

Another competent critic (and famous poet) says: "The story is one of those unpretentious, quiet, realistic, and yet vivid narratives, which are perhaps the very most popular among the great bulk of story-readers, like 'The Lamplighter,' Rutledge,' and many others which have sold wonderfully, and still sell."

STRIKE IN THE MILL.

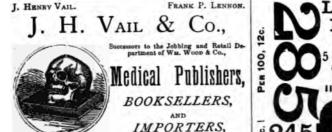

The initial volume of the new series of Round-Robin novels, 12mo, $1.00; in paper covers, 50 cents.

This exciting and skillfully wrought story deals intelligently with a question of vast importance in our modera civilization, the idea of workmen combining in offensive leagues to wage passive war against their employers. It is strong enough on the labor question to carry it with a rush to success.

BATTLE OF BIETICHEIM. THE

PROPHECY FULFILLED.

The French are building barracks upon the very spot where the author of "Bietigheim" puts the American troops in the supposed battle where Gen. Boulanger and the allied army force the passage of the German frontier. This partial fulfilment of the author's prophecy is shown in an article from a Strassburg paper of recent date.

[From "Bietigheim" (pages 81 and 82) written January, 1886.]

"The Army of the Vosges, which, under the command of General Boulanger, was massed along the Alsatian frontier. . . From these railway termini—viz., Giromaguy, St. Maurice, Cornimont, Gerardmer. . . good post roads led over the frontier into the Alsatian (German) territory. All of these passes were strongly fortified and garrisoned."

[From the Alsace Journal, Strasburg, January 25, 1887.]

"The heavy purchases of lumber, planks, and rafters made by contractors from France a fortnight ago are for building barracks near Gerardmer. In the vicinity of Epinal and St. Die. In this part of the Voges the garrisons are to be re-enforced by 20,000 men. There is talk of 3,000 men coming to Gerardmer, and the same number to Carcieux; the garrisons at St. Die and Brunjeres are also to be re-enforced."

This and other striking verifications of certain passages of "Bietigheim" should not fail to attract great attention to this remarkable and timely book.

NEW LIBRARY EDITIONS.

Encouraged by the success of the Library Edition of Shakespeare issued last season, we have concluded to issue this spring a uniform set of Pepys' Diary in four volumes, octavo, cloth, gilt top. This set is an exact reprint of the Bickers' London Edition, with foot-notes. It is printed from large open-faced type, double leaded, and illustrated with Four Fine Steel-Engravings. At the price decided upon, $8.00 for the set, it is sure to have a large sale, and the trade will do well to remember it when making up their spring orders.

Of our Shakespeare issued last June two editions have been sold, and we expect no less this year. Illustrated with Twenty-three Steel Engravings and Two Photogravures, Explanatory Notes at the end of each volume, and a Concordance (made for this edition) at the end of the fourth volume, it is, without doubt, the best and cheapest Complete Library Edition in the Market.

Four volumes, octavo, cloth, gilt top, cut or uncut edges, $10.00.

Liberal discounts to the trade. Special inducements to Jobbers using quantities.

"Every man is a debtor to his profession, from the which, as men do of course seek to receive countenance and profit, so ought they of duty to endeavor themselves by way of amends to be a help thereunto."—LORD BACON.

THE SPRING OUTLOOK.

THE outlook for the Spring at the present appears fairly good. A number of circumstances seem to be conspiring to influence trade in general to stand still or to progress slowly, as, for instance the uncertainty that prevails respecting the operation of the Inter-State Commerce Bill, and the notice of the trunk lines that all existing contracts will be cancelled on the 4th of April. But notwithstanding these and other drawbacks a feeling of steadiness prevails all over the country and no uneasiness with respect to the future is entertained. Business throughout the country has been in a healthier condition for the last seven months than for some time past, and with the change of the season, the opening of inland navigation, and one thing and another, business will make a spurt to carry it over the hot spell, and then Fall, for which a great deal of preparation is already being made, will take care of itself and of the season following it. We notice no diminution in the efforts of the publishing-houses to prepare goods for the ensuing season, and trust booksellers will assist in "keeping up the motion."

We are glad to see that some one at last has the courage to openly resent the imposition practised by the monopoly which controls the newspaper business on the elevated roads of New York City. The Evening Sun, as fearless as it is bright, refuses to pay that monopoly fifty dollars a week for the privilege of having its papers sold by them. As the management of that journal says: "The amount is insignificant, but the idea is preposterous, and we won't submit to it. The elevated railroads should be run in the interest of the people, and if there is any reason for the existence of the news-stands in the station, it is that they may be a convenience to the people." Others have thought so long ago; but they either grumbled and paid or "grumbled and went." It would be desirable to let a little daylight into the management of this concern. These roads enjoy an immense franchise at the hands of the people, and therefore are bound to render all the service they can promptly, efficiently, and at the lowest possible cost to the public, whose servants they ought to be.

THE American publishers of the "Life of Bishop Hannington" are trying an experiment which we hope will succeed and be widely imitated. Without conference with the author of that work they wrote him, when the book was put to press, that they desired to recognize his rights, and had placed him on the basis of the American author, and should pay him a royalty on the sales of the American edition. This is an instance of International Copyright in the absence of an international law.

INJUNCTION GRANTED IN THE EBERS' GALLERY CASE.

On the first inst. Judge Colt, of the Circuit Court of the U. S. District of Massachuetts, in the case of Wm. S. Gottsberger vs. Dana Estes. et al., granted the plaintiff's motion for preliminary injunction and denied the defendants' motion to dissolve the restraining order.

As will be remembered, Mr. Gottsberger was practically the compiler, or composer, of the work entitled "Ebers' Gallery." That is, he conceived the idea, made extracts from Dr. Ebers' works, of the translations of which he is the authorized publisher in this country, procured copyright verses from Mary J. Safford, devised the title-page -in fact, did all the work of composing and arranging the volume as it first appeared, with his imprint and copyright, in 1885. The volume that was subsequently issued under the same title by the Aldine Publishing Company is alleged to be, with one or two trivial exceptions, identically the same in get-up as that issued by Mr. Gotts-berger. Mr. Estes and the Aldine Pub. Co., of which Mr. Estes is practically the head, rested their defence on the ground that the requirements of the law of copyright had not been complied with, because the book had been published before two copies had been placed in the office of the Librarian of Congress. It appears that Mr. Gottsberger (before publishing the book) had sent to Estes & Lauriat two copies "for inspection." In answer to a proposition from Estes & Lauriat to leave the two copies on sale, Mr. Gottsberger replied that he desired to have both copies returned at once, because he could not send them any copies on sale. In answer to this request Estes & Lauriat returned one copy and retained the other. This, they afterwards claimed, constituted a sale of the book before the work had been properly copyrighted and, taking advantage of what they assumed was an omission, proceeded shortly after to print the book with the imprint of the Aldine Publishing Co.

Judge Colt's opinion is as follows: "I do not think, upon the papers before me, it can be fairly said that a sale of the plaintiff's book took place before November 18, 1885. Clearly there was no sale on November 4th, when Gottsberger shipped two copies of the work to the defendants for examination. In his letter of November 7th, Gottsberger requests the return of the two sample copies, and says he cannot send the defendants any copies on sale. The fact that the defendants, on Novemper 9th, in answer to this request, returned only one copy, and say they will keep the other, did not make it a sale on the part of Gottsberger. On the receipt of this last letter he could have called upon the defendants to return the remaining copy. From the subsequent act of Gottsberger in consenting to a sale by sending a bill for the book on November 30th, stating he should draw for the amount December 15th, it is not to be inferred that the sale took place November 4th, the date of the original shipment, or November 9th, when the defendants wrote and said they had kept one copy. Gottsberger had a reasonable time to decide what he would do, and, until the defendents received the bill of November 30th, I do not think it can fairly be said that he consented to a sale-at least I see no good ground for inferring a sale before November 18th, especially if such an inference operates to destroy the copyright. If the facts showed conclusively a sale, the copyright must fail; but where the sale is involved in doubt, I am of opinion that the copyright should be upheld, rather than declared void. As to the defence that no notice that the 'Emperor' and 'The Egyptian Princess' were copyrighted was inserted in the 'Ebers Gallery, I do not think the Act of Congress requires such notice to be inserted in every extract from a work which has been copyrighted which the proprietor shall use in another work.'

THE "DRUMMERS'" TAX ILLEGAL IN TENNESSEE.

THE following decision will no doubt be read with interest by the friends of Mr. Robbins in particular and all "drummers" in general. The case of Sabine Robbins, plaintiff in error, vs. The Taxing District of Shelby County, Tenn, in error to the Supreme Court of Tennessee, arose from the following state of facts:

Robbins was engaged in Memphis in soliciting orders for stationery for a Cincinnati firm and in exhibiting samples for the purpose of effecting sales. A State law, applicable only to this one taxing district was in force, subjecting "drum-mers" and all persons not having a regular licensed house of business in the district offering or selling goods by sample to a tax of $10a week or $25 a month. Robbins, who was unlicensed, was arrested, tried, convicted and fined, and on appeal the judgment was affirmed. In a long and carefully prepared opinion by Justice Bradley the court held that :

1. The Constitution gives to Congress, the power to regulate commerce among the States, and that power is necessarily exclusive whenever the subjects of it are national in their character or admit only of one uniform system or plan of

II. Where the power of Congress to regulate is exclusive, its failure to act indicates its will that the subject shall be left free from any restrictions or impositions, and any regulation by the States, except in matters of local concern only, is repugnant to such freedom.

III. The only way in which commerce between the States can be legitimately affected by State laws is when, by virtue of its police power and its jurisdiction over persons and property within its limits, a State provides for the security of life, limb, health, comfort, and property, or when it does those things which may incidentally affect commerce. But in making such internal regulations a State cannot impose taxes upon persons passing through or coming in merely for a temporary purpose; nor upon property imported and not yet become part of the common mass; and no discrimination can be made by any such regulations adversely to the persons or property of other States, and no regulation can be made directly affecting inter-State commerce.

In the matter of inter-State commerce the United States are, in the opinion of this court, but one country, and are and must be subject to one system of regulations, and not to a multitude of systems. It seems to be forgotten that the people of this country are citizens of the United States as well as of the individual States, and that they have some rights under the Constitution and laws of the former, independent of the latter, and free from any interference or restraint from them. To deny the State the power to lay the tax or require the license in question will not, the court believes in any perceptible degree diminish its re-Goods, when brought into a State in sources. consequence of a sale by a "drummer," will be liable to taxation, and as much will be realized as if the tax were imposed before the sale. To tax the sale of goods under such circumstances before the sale is, in the opinion of the court, clearly a tax on inter-State commerce itself. If the employment of "drummers" injuriously affects local trade Congress may be appealed to to make such regulations as the case may demand, and Con-gress alone can do this. The confusion into which the commerce of the country would be thrown by being subjected to State legislation on this subject would be, the court says, but a repetition of the disorder which prevailed under the old articles of confederation. The judgment of the Supreme Court of Tennessee is reversed and the plaintiff in error is ordered to be discharged.

The Chief-Justice and Justices Field and Gray dissented on the ground that the law in question is applicable to "drummers" coming into the Shelby County district from other parts of Tennessee as well as to those from other States, and to relieve the letter from taxation imposed on the former would be a discrimination against the citizens of the State.

DUTY ON WORKS PUBLISHED SERIALLY .- Assistant Secretary Fairchild of the Treasury, in answer to a quiry from Robert Beall, of Washington, gave the following ruling. As is familiar books printed more than twenty years ago can be imported free of duty. In the particular case in question, Mr. Beall wants to import 150 volumes of serial publications, two-thirds of which were printed over twenty years. His query was whether the entire work would be considered as one book, but Mr. Fairchild rules that every volume is regarded separately.

THE REQUIREMENTS OF A BIBLIOG-RAPHER.

For the benefit of those who imagine that "any one can make a catalogue," we reprint the following introduction to a notice of a special catalogue, from the Evening Post:

"It would be difficult to discover an intellectual quality which is not required in the maker of a complete catalogue to a large collection of books on a variety of subjects. He must have a high degree of imagination in the truest senseenough to put himself in the place of every possible inquirer, so as to know by a sort of instinct under what heads information on any subject will be sought. He must have the logical faculty which knows what to omit as well as what to insort. He must know the works with which he is to deal both with mechanical precision and with intellectual mastery. He is expected to direct the first practising physician of the day to the best information for his practical guidance in a case that puzzles lifelong experience by its novelty and peculiarity; to indicate the authoritative book on idealism or numismatics, and to guide the theologian to the source of the doctrine of penance. Indeed, his is an unenviable position. He requires qualities whose possession would place him above his work, and yet he cannot do his work efficiently without them. The result is, that there is scarcely such a thing as a complete catalogue in the world. Nevertheless, satisfactory lists of small collections, say 5000 or 10.000 volumes, have been made; nor is the making of them extremely difficult. For a general collection, it requires in the maker only skill, patience, and accuracy. If the collection is of especial interest—if, for instance, it is the best collection on some specific subject-one more qualification is demanded of the cataloguer: he should have a comprehensive acquaintance with the subject to which the collection relates; he should be able, by means of scholarly notes, to make his catalogue a valuable bibliographical monograph."

PUBLISHERS' BLUNDERS.

A LONDON publisher says in an interview printed in the Pall Mall Gazette:

"A publisher very often makes a mistake. He may be over-sanguine, and mistake what is only a poor duckling for an extremely fine swan, and over-produce. On the other hand, he or his professional reader may reject a book that afterwards makes a reputation and wins a fortune. heard, for instance, that a firm of publishers refused to give £40 for the copyright of 'East Lynne!' Take Mr. Henry George's 'Progress and Poverty;' it is said that he was compelled to resort to the commission method before that famous volume was given to the world. No publisher would look at it on any conditions. The history of the most popular hundred books of the last ten or twenty years, if it were told the world, would make an admirable and instructive volume. Take 'Ecce Homo' or 'John Inglesant,' and ask Professor Seeley or Mr. Shorthouse to tell you the number of copies of the first edition. To mention another book, the first edition. 'Tom Brown's School-Days,' who could have foreseen its enormous success? Books often owe their popularity to the chance allusion made from a platform by a great orator, a form of review which is worth a hundred columns of elaborate critical essays of which they have been the subject."

NEW YORK REMOVALS.

EVERY spring a few sprigs of the tree of the book-trade shoot out and up a little further. While the upward growth (we speak geographically) of the book-trade in New York City does not promise to be marked this year, the indications are that by degrees Twenty-third Street is bound to become the centre of booksellers, if not of publishers.

The following are the removals thus far re-

FOWLER & WELLS take a larger store at 775 Broadway, Dodd, Mead & Co. taking in their former quarters at 753, thus enlarging their already handsome store.

G. E STECHERT moves into the block with B. Westermann & Co, and locates at 828 Broadway, where he will not only have a more convenient, but also a roomier store.

F. W. CHRISTERN leaves Twenty-third Street and settles down again in fashionable Fifth Avenue, above Twenty-eighth Street, at No. 249.

NOTES ON AUTHORS.

W. M. GRISWOLD (Q. P. Index) writes us that the correct name of Theo. Gift is Dora Henrietta Boulger. His authority is a letter from the author herself.

CHARLES DICKENS' two daughters and his son Charles, Sir Arthur Sullivan, Mark Twain, Edmund Yates, and many other well-known people are contributors to the forthcoming book, "Dickens Portrayed by Pen and Pencil."

MR. W. H. HERNDON, the old law partner of President Lincoln, has in preparation another "Life," which he will publish in the near future. This work will deal principally with the career of Mr. Lincoln up to the time that he became President.

Ex-Gov. Curtin, of Pennsylvania, is likely to devote the coming summer to writing a volume of reminiscences. He is said to possess a large amount of documentary matter relating to Pennsylvania and the war, some of which is very interesting and of historical value.—Times.

JOSEPH HOWARD, Jr., the well-known journalist, has been engaged by a New York publishing-house to write a life of Henry Ward Beecher. He says that it is his intention to write only reminiscences and anecdotes, without attempting any high-flown panegyrics or deep analysis of the character of the great pulpit orator.

MR. HENRY C. LEA has completed work on his "History of the Inquisition of the Middle Ages," to which he has closely devoted himself for many years. Mr. Lea's originality, of research and exposition, as the Evening Post well says, is of a kind that leaves little scope to the reviewer. The date of publication is not yet determined.

MR. STANLEY, before setting out on his expedition to Central Africa, made arrangements, it is said, for the publication in London of a book describing his adventures. Sampson Low & Co., in view of the new interest in African travel, have brought out a popular edition of Joseph Thompson's narrative of his journey through Masailand, a book which influenced the late Bishop Hannington in his last fatal journey to choose the northern instead of the southern route.

The first of these, "The Dedication of Books to Patron and Friend," is by the same practised compiler, who has included many of our great authors in the lists of dedications and specimens of their style of praise from Shakespeare downward; the second, "Modern Methods of Illustrating Books," is by H. T. Wood, Secretary of the Society of Art, London, whose object in writing the treatise has been to place such information on the subject as he could get together, at the disposal of all those who are interested in the production of books. The London Literary World pronounces the book "a model of clearness and conciseness, minus technicalities. "The History of the Old English Letter Foundries," Talbot Barnes Reed has prepared a book of unique interest. It contains notes, biographical and historical, on the rise and progress of English typography, and is printed in old style type, on antique paper, with quaint head and tail pieces, with numerous illustrations and facsimiles of type. Prefixed to the history is an essay on the types and type-founding of the inventors of printing, and chapters on the origin and development of the various type characters, English and foreign, famous in the specimens of our national topography. A copious index adds to the usefulness of the volume, which, while accurate and exhaustive in its methods, is written in most readable style. "The Life and Poems of Mme. CASSELL & COMPANY have nearly ready an important work which has been in preparation for some time past, "Celebrities of the Century," edited by Lloyd C. Sanders, of Christ Church, Oxford, giving condensed accounts of the lives of men and women of all countries who have won distinction since the year 1800. Among the principal contributors are Wilfrid S. Blunt, Dr. Rob't Brown, T. Hall Caine, J. Cotter Morison, Stanley Lane-Poole, Dr. F. J. Furnivall, and many other well-known writers in every department of literature. Prof. Henry Morley, one of the most untiring of literary workers, has nearly ready his "History of English Literature," which will fill twenty volumes, and cover the whole subject, beginning with the time before Alfred the Great and coming down to the present day. "English as She is Taught" is said to be a record of actual mistakes collected in the scrap-book of a public-school teacher during an experience of several years." "Two Gentlemen of Goth-am" is a forthcoming novel certain to attract unusual attention by its brilliant pen-pictures of New York scenes and its clever handling of New York people. Well-known New York features, such as a famous fancy dress ball, a notorious club, a certain professional beauty, much talked about abroad; well-known foibles of well-known New York people are sketched; while that familiar combination of modern life-the railroad king and wrecker-is drawn with vigor. authors are two men well known about town, who paint scenes they have looked on in a way that at once shows a knowledge of them.

Johnson and Clarence C. Buel, of the editorial staff of the Century Magazine. The book will be published by subscription only. The bulk of the matter will consist of the articles on the Civil War, now appearing in the Century, but much new matter has been added, and many illustrations. The parts will be issued in chronological order, so as to form a connected history of the great war, written by participants on both sides. The mechanical features will be as perfect as art, skill, and abundant means can make them. The type is clear and of good size, the page a large octavo, with liberal margin, the paper heavy and of high finish. A full and complete index will make this a standard book of reference on war subjects in every library. It is planned to publish two parts each month, so that the beautiful books will be completed within a year and a half. Keeping in mind, probably that these needed relaxations require means, they will also furnish "How to Take Money Out of Wall Street," by Jared Flagg, Jr., which also gives the law of average and the applied principles of life insurance.

E. P. DUTTON & Co. have brought out several Easter booklets, that for beauty of idea and finish of execution, hold their own easily, even among the unusually attractive display in that line this year. "The Lily and the Cross," by Miss E. Nesbit, has eight full-page illustrations, faced by poems, and is put in card covers and also in satin, with a delicate design of the lily of the resurrection and the cross of Calvary on the front cover; "Rainbows of Promise for Morn and Eve" is a dainty, sixty-four-mo, printed in colors; and "Not Your Own," a book of counsels to young Christians, by the Rev. FORDS, HOWARD, & HULBERT announce that very shortly they will publish "A Summer in England with Henry Ward Beecher," giving not only all the sermons, lectures, and addresses delivered there by him last summer, but also an account of the trip, of his reception by people and clergy and statesmen. By the plain folk, by all the divers ranks of students and non-conformist ministers, and by the highest dignitaries of the Church of England, he was received with marked enthusiasm. This account is by Major J.B. Pond, his travelling companion and manager, and will give (what has never yet been given in this country) the truth about that trip. In his former English visit Mr. Beecher had to "fight with the wild beasts at Ephesus;" in this one he was courted and fêted and honored, especially by the eminent religious teachers of the land, as few other Americans ever have been. The book will be prefaced by a photographic portrait of Mr. Beecher.

FUNK & WAGNALLS announce for publication, about April 1, the "Life of the Rev. Geo. C. Haddock," who was murdered in Sioux City, Iowa, by a foreman of the largest brewery in the city, in consequence of his persistent and uncompromising enmity to the saloon power of the neighborhood. It is written by his son, Frank C. Haddock, a promising young lawyer, in the hope that the sale of the book will help the murdered man's family, who are very much in need of pecuniary assistance. Glentworth Butler, the volume on "Revelation" having just been issued; "James, Peter, John, Jude," the new volume of Meyer's "Commentary on the New Testament," edited by Prof. Timothy Dwight; and "Pulpit Trees and Homiletic Undergrowth," by Rev. osity of the reading public, and one which will have additional interest now, as being the last volume prepared for the press by the author. It is from the pen of the late Dr. B. F. Taylor, author of "Between the Gates," "World on Wheels," etc., and is said to be decidedly unique in character and original in design. Its title is "Theophilus Trent; or, old times in the oak openings," depicting scenes and incidents of pioneer life forty years ago. Mr. Taylor's ac-knowledged versatility and genius, and his marvellous descriptive power, promise a most fas-cinating volume. The essays on Goethe, which were read before the Milwaukee Literary School last August, are soon to be published by Messrs. Griggs under the title "Poetry and Philosophy of Goethe," edited by Marion V. Dudley. The great diversity of opinions regarding his life, and the diversity of interpretations which his writings have given rise to, render essays like these, which are the productions of some of the most faithful and diligent students of German literature in this country, of deep interest, not only to the admirers of the great German poet and philosopher, but to students of literature generally. "Masters of the Situation; or, some secrets of success and power," by W. J. Tilley, another new book soon to be published by this house, promises to be of great interest to all classes of readers, and to young men especially. "Promptness," "Individuality," "Genius," "Application," "Enthusiasm," "Man-"Genius," "Application," "Enthusiasm," "Manners," "Opportunity," "Masters of the Situation," etc., are some of the topics discussed. The subjects quoted convey but an inadequate idea of the scope and richness of the work, which is free from any symptoms of didactic dryness, and the discussions of which teem with apposite illustrations.

HARPER & BROTHERS have just ready "Waste-Land Wanderings," by Dr. Charles C. Abbott, author of "Upland and Meadow," etc., in which he brings his ardent love of nature and his remarkable talent at word-painting to a description of a little stream of water which forms one of the tributaries of the Delaware River, and was first discovered in 1654 by the Swedish settlers of the surrounding country; "A Manual of International Law," by George B. Davis, Assistant Prof. of Law at West Point, who makes his subject interesting to all intelligent readers by the historical treatment by which the law of nations is presented as a changing and developing expression of civilization; a translation from the French of Paul Celière of "The Startling Exploits of Dr. Quiès," which is an excellent piece of work by Mrs. Cashel Hoey and Mr. John Lillie, relating the adventures of a thoroughly commonplace French boy, which are illustrated by a great abundance of pictures that show the light touch of French talent; and a collection of three novelettes translated from the German of Karl Erdmann Edler, by the Earl of Lytton, who prefaces them with a critical literary sketch of the talented author he desires to introduce to the English-speaking world. The book takes its name from the longest story and is entitled "Baldine and Other Tales. The author has decided psychological and dramatic genius. His characters are alive and his workmanship is highly finished. It is needless to say that in "Owen Meredith" he has found an ideal translator. William Clark Russell has also furnished another of his remarkable sea stories, called "The Golden Hope.". Besides all these volumes already waiting for readers there is a long list of volumes ahead for which readers will be obliged to wait a longer or shorter time at the pleasure of authors, printers, binders. Thomas-Hardy will delight them with "The Woodlandbra;" William Black has finished "Sabina Zembra;" and Mary E. Wilkins has written "A Humble Romance and Other Stories." Hersey; and a reprint in their Handy Series of their "English Men of Letters." Of religious interest are "The Russian Church and Russian Dissent," by A. F. Heard; and "Philosophy of Theism," by Borden P. Bowne; of historical value is "The Negro Troops in the War of the Rebellion," by George W. Williams, author of the "History of the Negro Race in America from 1619 to 1880;" "Horsemanship for Ladies," by Theodore H. Mead, fully illustrated, gives much useful information; and a new edition of Mrs. John Sherwood's "Manners and Social Usages," will meet with the warm reception accorded her book when first issued. The "young people" are never forgotten by the Harpers and this season will provide them with "The Flamingo Feather," by Kirk Munroe, the story of Indians which has been read with such absorbing interest while running as serial in Harper's Young People; and "Sea Urchins," a tale of Mt. Desert told with all the imagination and special narrative talent of Mrs. Burton Harrison.

They will add two important volumes to their edition of Symonds' "Renaissance in Italy," dealing with "The Catholic Reaction;" "Greek Literature," an exhaustive philosophical account of the growth of Greek literature, giving its relations to the physical surroundings and political and social history of the people, by Thomas Sargent Perry; and the second and third volumes of "Doyle's English Colonies in America," treating of "The Puritan Colonies in America," which will be eagerly read by those who received the first volume in the series with such warm, yet discriminating enthusiasm. They will also bring out Moore's "Epicurean," which is said to have suggested H. Rider Haggard's "She;" and Brooke's "Fool of Quality. This firm devotes itself largely to educational books and among its many new enterprises calls attention to "Calculus," by Prof. Simon New-comb, of Johns Hopkins University, completing his series of mathematical texts; "Introduction to Attic Greek," an elementary text-book by Prof. Jabez Brooks, of the University of Minnesota; "Elementary French Grammar," by Prof. W. D. Whitney, of Yale College; "Nou-velles Lectures," by Mme. Alliot, the successful author of "Les Auteurs Contemporains;" a new edition of Moser's "Der Bibliothekar; and a new edition of "Die Jungfrau von Orleans," with notes and vocabulary by Rev. A. B. Nichol, of Yale College. In their well-known Unterhaltungs-Bibliothek they will have "Eine Frage," by Georg Ebers; and "Auf Wache," by Berthold Auerbach; and "Der Gefrorene Kuss," by Otto Rognetti, edited with literary notes by A. A. Hardwell, of Oxford University.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & Co. will make some important additions to their series of American history, statesmanship, and literature. In the series of American Commonwealths " New York" has just appeared, in two volumes, by Hon. Ellis H. Roberts, editor of the Utica Herald; and "Connecticut" is promised, by Prof. Alexander Johnston. Like the writers of previous volumes in this series, the authors of the new volumes are exceptionally fitted to produce books of positive value. To the series of American Statesmen has recently been added Mr. Roosevelt's Life of Thomas H. Benton and Mr. Carl Schurz has completed the Life of Henry Clay, in two volumes, which, by reason of the great ability, long term of service, and remarkable influence of Mr. Clay and the unusual vigor and clearness of Mr. Schurz's style, cannot fail to be very interesting. It is hoped that Prof. McMaster's Life of Frank-1 may be published in the series of American Men of Letters this spring. Mr. Carswell Mc-Clellan has prepared a book entitled "Grant versus the Record, from the Rapidan to Appomattox Court House," showing that in General Grant's Memoirs injustice, or less than justice, has been done to Generals Meade and Humphreys, on whose staff McClellan served. In fiction Dr. Josiah Royce, author of "California," of the Commonwealths Series, has written a striking story of California life, society, and character, which he calls "The Feud of Oakfield Creek." Joseph Kirkland, of Chicago, offers a story of Illinois life in its earlier and rougher days, under the stimulating title "Zury, the Meanest Man in Spring County." In poetry, Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney will originate a tasteful little book which she names "Daffodils," and a new edition of her " Pansies" will be issued in the same style. interesting book, called "Colonial Ballads," by Margaret J. In "A Look Round Literature," Robert Buchanan surveys the literary field from Æschylus to Tennyson in a series of essays, which the London Globe pronounces "thoughtful and stimulating." His attitude is that of antagonism to what he deems the authorized criticism of the day; it is gratifying to meet with one so enthusiastic and independent. "Studies in Italian Literature," by Catherine Mary Phillimore, is in the form of a poem and treats of the Paradise of Dante, Petrarch, Tasso, the Prince Printers of Italy, the Italian Drama, Manzoni, etc., and includes the "Legend of Il Cenacolo." Students of legendary lore will welcome "Popular Tales and Fictions, their Migrations and Transformations," by W. A. Clouston, which gives much information upon the origin and diffusion of popular tales, etc., etc. A cheaper edition in one volume is promised of Mme. Campan's "Marie Antoinette," and an anecdote history of the "Life and Works of Verdi," by Arthur Pongin, translated from the French by James E. Matthew, contains a good portrait of the great composer and fac-similes of some of his familiar scores. "Le Livre d'Amour' is a choice collection of chansons, madrigals, sonnets, odes, serenades, ballades, etc., selected from French poetry of all times, beautifully printed and exquisitely bound in white vellum, with gold fleurde-lis ornamentation. It will be brought out in four different styles, on Japanese, Holland, and Whatman paper, and is said to be the most complete collection of love poems in existence, being compiled under exceptionally fortunate circumstances. Spencer's "Things Old and New," a store-house of illustrations, with a preface by Thomas Fuller, to which is added "A Treasury of Similes," by Robert Cawdray, both being carefully edited from the original editions (1658 and 1609), with an introduction by Rev. J. G. Pilkington, Incumbent of St. Mark's, Dalston, London. Rev. C. H. Spurgeon says "there is nothing to surpass Spencer's 'Things Old and New' in the whole compass of literature." "Modern Hinduism" is an account of the religion and life of the Hindus in Northern India, by W. J. Wilkins, of the London Missionary Society. "Twenty-one the London Missionary Society. "Twenty-one Years' Work in the Holy Land" is a record and a summary published for the Committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund; and Ernst Renan's "Studies in Religious History" will also be made ready during the spring season. A valuable work designed for the use of the Senate, the bar, the pulpit, the orator, and the lover of nature will be "Scientific Illustrations and Symbols," a compilation of moral truths, mirrored in scientific facts. "A Comtist Lover, and other Studies," by Elizabeth Rachel Chapman, is divided into two parts. The first study is a dialogue on positivism and the zeitgeist, and with the "Ex-tension of the Law of Kindness," an essay on the rights of animals, makes the first division. Part II. contains the "Delphine" of Mme. de Staël; "Some Immortality Thoughts," and Some Novels of William Black.

WILLARD SMALL, Boston, has in preparation "The Schoolmaster," by Roger Ascham.

CHARLES C. SOULE will have ready in May or June, but possibly not before September, Leonard A. Jones' "Index to Legal Periodical Literature," compiled on the plan of "Poole's Index," which will probably be a work of 800 pages octavo, of great value to general as well as to law libraries. For other announcements of the house consult the Classified List of Spring Publications in this issue, under heading of Law, Government, etc.

G. & F. N. Spon's announcements will be found in full under the heading Arts and Sciences, in the Classified List of Spring Publications elsewhere in this issue.

TICKNOR & Co.'s long list of spring announcements as usual covers almost every department of general literature. American fiction always occupies a conspicuous place on the catalogues of this firm, and this year is by no means set aside. "Two Gentlemen of Boston" is spoken of as "a remarkably happy delineation of New England rural life, with contrasting pictures of Boston society and occupations;" "The Strike in the B— Mills" is a timely story, having for its theme that great problem of modern civilization, the labor question, which is said to be handled in so skilful a manner, that this initial volume of the new series of Round Robin novels "is sure of a rush to success;" "The Confessions of Claud," by Edgar Fawcett, again has New York City for the scene of its strong, spirited story; "The Devil's Hat," by Melville Phillips, proposes to give an accurate description of life in the oil regions of Pennsylvania, which are sketched with a faithful and artistic hand; "Lights and Shadows of a Life," by Mrs. Admiral Dahlgren, gives a true picture of Southern home life. In May the publishers begin the issuing of a set of handsome and convenient paper-covered volumes for summer reading, many of them quite new and others the choicest and most successful novels of recent years. These books will be published regularly once a week for three months. They also announce for a late issue a novel by Edward Bellamy, author of "Miss Ludington's Sister," one by Miss L. G. Noble, author of "A Reverend Idol, "Steadfast," a novel by Miss Rose Terry Cooke, and "Stories and Sketches," by J. B. O'Reilly. Forthcoming works of literary importance will be "Last Memorials of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow," a rare collection of memorabilia, anecdotes, and incidents carefully edited by the brother who compiled the "Life" so conscientiously. "American Literature and Other Papers," by E. P. Whipple, with an introduction by J. G. Whittier, to whom the book is dedicated, to contain the great essayist's Centennial articles on American literature, two articles on Emerson, a brilliant monograph on Starr King, and the now classic review of Daniel Webster's oratory. Scott's "Lay of the Last Minstrel," and Tennyson's "Enoch Arden" will be ready in the Tremont and Pocket editions. The latter, with some other poems, will also be put in the Student's edition with notes by Rolfe. Mrs. S. W. G. Benjamin has written a series of delightful little essays and sketches by a convalescent, to be published under the name of "Day Dreams and Musings," which beautifully describe a quiet life of pain and gradual gaining of strength. Maturin M. Ballou has ready another of his fascinating descriptive works, entitled " Due North," and giving a vivid picture of a recent journey through Norway, Sweden, Russia, and other northern countries of Europe. New revised editions of "Ticknor's American Guide-Books" will be ready in early June. A practical and valuable work for architects will be "Safe Building," by Louis de Coppet Berg, who has the advantage of being a practising architect, and of confining himself to the use of arithmetic, algebra, and plane geometry in his mathematical demonstrations; E. E. Viollett-Le-Duc's "Discoveries on Architecture" will be reissued in two volumes, richly illustrated; and S. P. Langley will have a new work on "Astronomy," with elaborate illustrations, giving the very latest discoveries and theories of science. Rev. J. B. R. Walker has completed his monumental work, "A New and Enlarged Concordance to the Holy Scriptures," bearing special reference to the Revised Version as well as to the King James Version. All the older concordances have been patiently studied, their good points made use of, their weaknesses avoided, and all students of the Bible will find this an invaluable key to its treasures.

S. W. TILTON has just ready a set of three souvenir card books, under the titles of "He Tempers the Wind," "Ye Birthday Souvenir," and "All Else of Earth." Each booklet contains five designs in outline, which are to be filled in by the amateur artist. The idea is a good one and is designed to take the place of the "Christmas Card," which can be duplicated in countless number, while this cannot, as, being hand-painted, no two will be alike, and will be doubly treasured by the recipient, as the individual work of the giver. Specimens carefully done are very handsome, and surpass the lithographs by their beauty and naturalness.

THE UNITED BRETHREN PUB. HOUSE announce "Gospel Workers' Treasury." by the Rev. E. S. Lorenz, a book of suggestions for Christian work, and, principally, a carefully selected and arranged collection of illustrations and anecdotes, containing much that is new and fresh.

J. H. VAIL & Co.'s (N. Y.) announcements will be found in full under the heading of Medical Science in the Classified List of Spring Announcements and publications elsewhere in this issue.

VAN ANTWERP, BRAGG & Co. have just ready "The Eclectic Guide to Health," a work on scientific physiology and hygiene, with special reference to the nature of alcoholic drinks and narcotics, and their effects upon the human system, designed to meet the requirements of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the laws of several States providing for instruction in this branch of study in the public schools, which is essentially a revision of "Eclectic Physiology and Hygiene," with the difference that the effects of alcohol are discussed under each division of the subject. In the same line they publish a book for primary classes, entitled "The house we Live In," devoted to temperance, physiology, and hygiene. They have nearly ready Rev. Edward D. Morris' "Scripture Readings," consisting of one hundred selections from the various versions of the Bible, chiefly from the James Version, though much space is given to the Revised Version and the Bishops' Bible; and, in a few instances, to exhibit the changes in the English language in three or four centuries, some use has been made of the Coverdale Version, issued in 1535, and of the Tyndale Version, 1525-30. Many portions of the book have been so arranged and printed alternately in large and small type, that they may be read responsively by the pupils. This style has been adopted in order to increase the interest of the pupils in these passages, and will also serve as a valuable aid in reading. The general purpose of the compiler has been to furnish a series of selections from the Scriptures which should in both substance and form be available for the use of teachers and pupils in the opening exercises of the school. It is believed that nothing will be found in this compilation which is unsuitable for such use, or which is on any just grounds open to objection. "Elementary Mechanical Drawing," by Frank Aborn, Superintendent of drawing in the Cleveland public schools, is intended for school and shop, beginning with a chapter on draughting tools, and then divided into two sections, the first treating of geometrical drawing with problems, and the second of constructive Drawing with problems. The house calls special attention to its series of " Eclectic German Readers," comprising a primer and five readers, of which the higher ones give compilers are W. H. Weick and C. Grebner, who include exercises in translation, script-lessons, interlinear translations, and a complete course in language-lessons, and composition and models for letter-writing. Attractive typography, superior illustrations, and careful gradation make this a series of great merit.

D. VAN NOSTRAND has in press a volume on "Organic Analysis," a manual of the descriptive and analytical chemistry of certain carbon compounds in common use, by Albert B. Prescott, of the University of Michigan. Among the new numbers of the Van Nostrand Science Series there will probably be issued "The Treatment of Seuage," by Dr. C. Meymott Tidy, and "Petroleum and its Products," by Boonton Redwood.

FREDERICK WARNE & Co. have already published some Easter novelties, to which we called attention in our issue of the 12th inst., and have also already sent us an early copy of the new edition of "Nuttall's Standard Dictionary of the English Language," which for cheapness and quality has few competitors in the market. It is based on the labors of the most eminent lexicographers, and comprises many thousands of new words, which modern literature, science, and art have called into existence and common usage; with pronunciations, etymologies, definitions, appendixes of proper names, illustrations, etc. It has been revised, extended, and improved throughout by the Rev. James Wood, who has striven to combine comprehensiveness of matter with clearness and conciseness of definition, and to produce a dictionary of English words, that will be found adequate to all ordinary needs. They will shortly have ready "From Eden to Patmos," by Rev. Gordon Calthorp, a new book of Bible stories for children, giving scenes and incidents from the Creation to Revelation, explained and illustrated with maps and many pictures. The author is vicar of a large London parish. They are also about to publish in connection with the Jubilee a new life of "The Queen: her early life and reign, written in popular style and profusely illustrated; also, a "Victoria Birthday-Book," with portraits and ornamental borders.

CHARLES L. WEBSTER & Co., N. Y. City, show decided genius in securing the publication of works sure of enormous sales as subscription-books. Their first announcement is the "Life of Pope Leo XIII.," compiled from an authentic memoir furnished by his order, by Rev. Dr. Bernard O'Reilly. This work is written with the encouragement, approbation, and blessing of the Pope, and will be brought out simultaneously in six different languages in honor of the golden jubilee of the Sovereign Pontiff, which is this year celebrated by his people. It is fifty years since Leo XIII. became a prelate. The work is profusely illustrated with two chromos printed in ten colors, two steel-plate engravings, and twenty-two full-page illustrations. Every genuine copy of the book will contain a fac-simile of the letter to Chas. L. Webster, written by His Eminence Cardinal Parocchi, Vicar of His Holiness, a fac-simile of the letter of acceptance of the dedication of the book by His Eminence James, Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop of Baltimore, and also a letter commending the work from His Grace, the Most Rev. M. A. Corrigan, Archbishop of New York. Their next undertaking will be the publication of "The Genesis of the Civil War," the story of Sumter, by Brevet Major-General S. W. Crawford, a large volume, fully illustrated, which is a careful study of all the events of that period, from the first trouble with South Carolina, until Fort Sumter was evacuated by Major Anderson, under whom Gen. Crawford was senior staff officer, and consequently eye-witness of what took place at Forts Moultrie and Sumter. This will be followed by the "Reminiscences of Gen. Winfield Scott Hancock," by his wife, beginning with the time of their marriage, and going down to the day of his death. It is full of interesting details of life in the plains and in California, and also of the Seminole war in Florida, and will derive special value from an account of the battle of Gettysburg written by Gen. Hancock and never before published.

Bradlee Whidden, Boston, has in preparation a work on "The Eggs of North American Birds," by C. J. Maynard, with notes, nudification, breeding habits, etc., illustrated by 12 colored plates.

WHITE, STOKES & ALLEN have now ready two delightful additions to their new series of volumes of American verse, " Madrigals and Catches," by Frank Dempster Sherman, and "Thistle-Drift, by John Vance Cheney, both to be brought out in an Elzevir 16mo, printed from new type on very fine laid paper and bound in new parchment paper binding, in olive green vellum cloth, in half calf, limp calf, or tree calf. The former volumes in this series were " Point Lace and Diamonds," by George A. Baker, of the Commercial Advertiser; and "Cap and Bells," by Samuel Minturn Peck. Mrs. George A. Baker also has a book of short stories nearly ready, to be called "Mrs. Hephæstus and Other Short Stories," which will also include "West Point," a comedy in three acts. To their many practical and deservedly popular cookery books they will add "The Universal Cookery Book," giving practical recipes for household use selected from the most eminent authorities, including Marion Harland, Miss Parloa, Mrs. Washington, Thomas J. Murrey, Miss Corson, Gertrude Strohm, etc., etc., bound in cloth or the now pop-ular "kitchen" binding with blank pages for additional recipes. A new volume is also just issued in W. O. Stoddard's "Lives of the Presidents," treating of "John Adams, and Thomas Jefferson," admirably written and especially suited to young people.

THOMAS WHITTAKER will publish early in April, Canon C. A. Row's "Future Retribution Viewed in the Light of Reason and Revelation." It will make a volume the size of the author's widely known Bampton Lectures, and no doubt will be greeted with very considerable interest Mr. Whittaker will publish here simultaneously with its issue in England Rev. E. Hatch's "Early History of Christian Institutions."

JOHN WILEY & Sons announce as nearly ready several important works in their special line of text-books of applied sciences. Part II, of the "Elementary Text-Book of Physics," by Prof. Anthony, of Cornell, and Prof. Brackett, of Princeton University, treats of electricity and magnetism, and acoustics and optics; Lieut.-Com. J. E. Craig, U. S. Navy, has written a treatise on "Azimuth," with a study of the astronomical triangle, illustrated by thirty plates; Charles E. Brillen has ready a "Cipher Code of Rolled Iron and Steel," including the productions of every rolling-mill in the country; Prof. Charles W. Y., has prepared "A Primary Geometry;" and Prof. Ricketts, of the School of Mines, Columbia College, has ready Part I. of "Skeleton Notes upon Inorganic Chemistry," devoted to non-metallic elements; "Cable Tramways," by J. Bucknall Smith, fully illustrated; "Quantitive Analysis," a translation of Dr. Alexander Classen's work, by Prof. Wm. Hale Halleck, well illustrated; and "Differential Equations," a mathematical treatise, by Prof. W. W. Johnson, are also almost ready for the public. John Henry Steele, of the Royal Veterinary College, London, has prepared a valuable "Treatise on the Diseases of the Dog," which will be published with many illustrations.

R. WORTHINGTON & Co. announce a hand-some new edition of "Montaigne's Essays," in one volume; "Chance and Luck," under which title Prof. Richard A. Proctor has formulated his theories about the average chances of gambling shares, wagers, lotteries, betting on races, etc. etc., reducing all such chances to certain laws of luck, which he claims to have studied with the same accurate attention he has given to his astronomical calculations; and a new edition of Mrs. S. C. Hall's "Sketches and Stories of Irish Character," which made such a sensation in its day. They will also add about fifty new volumes to their "Standard Series" and get up a new edition of Warren's masterpiece, "Ten Thousand a Year." The attention of the trade is also called to their catalogue of plates to be sold.

E. & J. B. YOUNG & Co. announce for early publication "The Church and the Faith," a philosophical history of the Catholic Church, by the Rev. W. B. Bolmer. Among the subjects treated are the Church in its theory and establishment, the general councils and important controversies, and the claims of the Church in America.

Two Important Works

THAT SHOULD BE IN EVERY LIBRARY.

SOCIAL SOLUTIONS

(Solutions Sociales).

BY M. GODIN,

Founder of the Familistere at Guise; Prominent Leader of Industries in France and Belgium; Member of the National Assembly.

> TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH BY MARIE HOWLAND.

1 vol., 12mo, illustrated, cloth gilt, $1.50.

An admirable English translation of M. Godin's statement of the course of study which led him to conceive the Social Palace at Guise, France. There is no question that this publication will mark an era in the growth of the labor question. It should serve as the manual for organized labor in its present contest, since its teachings will as surely lead to the destruction of the wages system as the abolition movement lead to that of chattel slavery.

This book has more reading matter and more valuable information than any cook-book on the market, and is sure of an instant welcome from the hundreds of housekeepers who have profited by the author's lectures and the many thousands who have learned to value "Her New Cook-Book and Marketing Guide," of which sixty thousand copies have been sold by the publishers.

LATIN HYMNS.

(Corolla Hymnorum Sacrorum.) Translated by the Hon. JOHN LORD HAYES, LL.D. 1 vol., small 4to, gilt top, gold and black stamps, $1.50; white vellum, full gilt, gold stamps, $1.75.

The object of this litle volume is not merely to give the reader English verse, but verse preserving in English form, as far as possible, all the Latin characteristics of the originals.

GEORGE ELIOT'S COMPLETE WORKS.

Sterling Edition.

This beautiful edition will be published at the rate of one volume per month, and will be the first complete edition ever issued in America at a popular price. It will be printed from new plates, electrotyped at the University Press, on fine ivory finish paper, illustrated with new and original etchings, photo-etchings, and wood-cuts. 12 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, gilt tops, $21.00; half calf or half morocco, $45.00.

"Adam Bede" will be the first volume issued. It will be uniform with the publishers' Sterling Edition of Carlyle, and the only fine, moderate-priced, complete edition of the great novelist yet issued.

KEY TO NORTH AMERICAN BIRDS.

Third Revised Edition.

By ELLIOTT COUES, M.A., M.D., Ph.D. It contains a concise account of every species of living and fossil bird at present known on the continent north of the boundary line between Mexico and the United States, including Greenland. With which are incorporated General Ornithology, an outline of the structure and classification of birds; and Field Ornithology, a manual of collecting, preparing, and preserving birds. The new edition presents the nomenclature of the American Ornithologists' Union, in the most convenient form for comparison with that of former editions. Illustrated with over 500 wood-engravings. I vol., royal 8vo, vellum cloth, price reduced to $7.50.

Coues' "Key" is too well known as a leading and authoritative treatise to require remark, having for twelve years held its place as the standard work of reference for professional ornithologists as well as for students and amateurs. The latest and most exhaustive American Ornithology. Indispensable to every sportsman, amateur, and working ornithologist.

KEY TO NORTH AMERICAN BIRDS. Sportsman's and Tourist's Edition.

1 vol., flexible Russia leather, yellow edges, $7.50.

The page of this edition is six by eight and a half inches, and it will thus commend itself to the classes for which it is now especially made, for its convenient size and almost indestructible binding.

THE WHITE HILLS.

By T. STARR KING. A reprint of this rare American Classic, illustrated with new cuts and beautiful photogravures. I vol., crown 8vo, $2.50.

In making a new edition of "The White Hills," which has long been out of market, the publishers have thought it wiser to reprint the 1859 edition without attempting to "bring it up to date" in the matter of routes and hotels. They have therefore inserted photogravure reproductions from nature of some of the most noted changes in the mountains.

THE EARLY TUDORS.

By JUSTIN McCARTHY. Vol. XVII. "Epochs of History Series." 1 vol., 16mo, cloth, $1,00.

The authorized English-American Edition of this addition to this well-known series of historical handbooks.

SOCIAL CUSTOMS.

By FLORENCE Howe HALL. I vol., 12mo, cloth, $1.50.

This book is a complete manual of American Etiquette by the daughter of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, and treats in an entertaining and instructive style some of the social problems that beset young and old in their daily intercourse, and will be found of use even by those most au fait in Mrs. Grundy's law of etiquette.

A PROFITABLE BOOK FOR MANUFACTURING TOWNS.

An Encyclopadia written by practical men for practical ends. Its whole plan and style differs essentially from its predecessors, every page being crammed with facts of industrial and commercial importance. Science is introduced only so far as is necessary to give lucid explanation of the principles involved in particular branches of manufacture; and historical retrospect is reduced to a minimum. Thus ample space is left for those practical details which are in universal request.

I.

Professor Johnny.

By the author of "Birchwood," "Fitch Club,', etc.

Johnny is a precocious lad in knickerbockers who has been dubbed "professor" by some of his young friends because he wears spectacles, is fond of study, natural philosophy, and chemistry, and likes to perform experiments. He is the central figure of a capital story for boys and girls, which combines instruction and amusement in a clever way. Such common phenomena as the burning of a match, the kindling of a fire, the solution of solids in liquids, and some of the more uncommon chemical processes are described by Professor Johnny in simple and easily comprehensible language, and gives the youthful reader a fascinating peep into the wonderful realm of natural science. The author of "Birchwood," "The Fitch Club," and "The Riverside Museum" has a happy faculty for writing useful and diverting children's stories, and the book in hand is not inferior to his previous produc_ tions.

II.

Sigrid.

An Icelandic Love Story. Translated from the Danish of Jon Thordssön Thoroddsen, who, in a style remarkable for its quiet force and poetical charm, depicts almost every phase of life in contemporary Iceland.

III.

(The Disciple.) By the Rev. H. R. HAWEIS, M.A.

The fourth volume of "Christ and Christianity."

The Literary World says: "Mr. Haweis contends for a rational estimate of the New Testament records as distinct from an absolutely divine and infallible book, a position which we hasten to say need in no way imply that he is other than a profound and loving believer in the New Testament."

IV.

Cuore.

An Italian School Boy's Journal. By EDMONDO DE AMICIS. Translated from the Italian.

The book purports to be the journal of an Italian lad who writes down his school experiences, the stories told him by his teachers, the letters of his parents, and so on. For the originality of its form, the intensity of its style, and for the skill displayed in its delineation of character, Cuore has been highly praised by Italian critics.

FRENCH BOOKS. IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

NEW EDITION OF

"LES MISERABLES,"

BY VICTOR HUGO.

AS Booksellers are probably aware, there is, since the death of Victor Hugo, no convenient edition in the original French of his great work of "Les Misérables" to be obtained, although there exists a demand for it. With a view of supplying this demand I have undertaken the publication of the work and will issue it in five volumes at intervals, between April and December, as quickly as the work can be done.

To do this thoroughly and to make a standard and handsome edition the electrotypes are being made from new long primer type especially purchased for the purpose, the type-setting is being done by intelligent French compositors, and the revision of the work is in charge of a thorough

French proof-reader.

The books will be printed on fine paper in the best possible manner and bound (to say the least) in a very much superior style to French books generally.

THE PRICE

will be made exceedingly low as follows:

The Set in 5 Volumes, Paper, $4 50
'' 5 '' Oloth, 6 50
'' 5 '' Half calf, 13 50

SPECIAL TERMS TO THE TRADE

will be made for advance orders on the entire set, and, as it is the most costly and important literary publication in French, ever made in America, I trust that I will receive liberal and substantial support in my undertaking, especially so as any order for a given quantity will not aggregate to a large amount, to the bookseller, as each volume will be delivered as published at intervals of about two months each—and I think booksellers may easily obtain subscriptions for the entire set; while to those ordering ten or more sets cards showing the styles of binding will be sent free.

Orders for any number before publication will be charged at 40 per cent. discount.

10 Copies, 40 and 5 per cent. 50 " 40 and 10 per cent. 100 " 50 per cent.

These may be assorted in binding as desired by the bookseller but this special offer will terminate after the publication of the first volume.

As this book is one of the "Immortals," no bookseller dealing in French works can overstock himself with them, and I trust that, recognizing this fact, and the importance of the undertaking that I will receive a liberal advance order for the set from the trade.

WILLIAM R. JENKINS, Publisher and Importer of French Books, 850 Sixth Avenue. New York.

FRENCH BOOKS of every description in Stock and supplied to the trade at liberal discounts. Send for catalogues.

PROPHECY FULFILLED.

THE BATTLE OF BIETICHEIM.

The French are building barracks upon the very spot where the author of "Bietigheim" puts the American troops in the supposed battle where Gen. Boulanger and the allied army force the passage of the German frontier. This partial fulfilment of the author's prophecy is shown in an article from a Strasburg paper of recent date.

[From "Bietigheim" (pages 81 and 82), written January, 1886.]

"The Army of the Vosges, which, under the command of General Boulanger, was massed along the Alsatian frontier. From these railway termini—viz., Giromaguy, St. Maurice, Cornimont, Gerardmer, good post roads led over the frontier into the Alsatian (German) territory. All of these passes were strongly fortified and garrisoned."

[From the Alsace Journal, Strasburg, January 25, 1887.]

"The heavy purchases of lumber, planks, and rafters made by contractors from France a fortnight ago are for building barracks near Gerardmer. . . . In the vicinity of Epinal and St. Die. In this part of the Vosges the garrisons are to be re-enforced by 20,000 men. There is talk of 3000 men coming to Gerardmer, and the same number to Carcieux; the garrisons at St. Die and Brunjeres are also to be re-enforced."

This and other striking verifications of certain passages of "Bietigheim" should not fail to attract great attention to this remarkable and timely book.

Illustrated. Price, 50 cents.

Uncle Tom's Cabin?

JUANITA (pronounced whon-ec-tah)

a romance of real life in Cuba fifty years ago

Juanita was written before even New England was aroused to the essential wickedness of slavery; before Uncle Tom's Cabin; before Uncle Tom's Cabin was thought of; before the Boston Mob; about the time of the earliest voices raised in behalf of the slave and liberty; the time of indifference—worse than indifference—persecution of those who were not indifferent. A tale of Cuban slavery by a New England woman fully awake to the wrongs and sufferings borne by the slaves of her own country. And yet she kept the story back from the world from motives of delicacy, because it was true in the principal persons and incidents!

Whistler, Civil Engineer," etc. This little book points out how bridge catastrophes may be avoided, and is written in plain and unmistakable language, so that any person, whether or not educated in the science of engineering, may be able to understand its counsel and teachings. Dr. J. C. Street, of Boston, has written a large octavo volume of about 400 pp., entitled "The Hidden Way Across the Threshold," now in press by Lee & Shepard. The country on either side of Crosswick's Creek, a thread-like stream running through the centre of New Jersey and emptying into the Delaware, is the scene of Dr. Abbott's present work, which is in line with his previous works, "Upland and meadow" and "A naturalist's rambles about home." He describes with charming minimum and the accommendation of the commendation nuteness and to the accompaniment of many amusing anecdotes the beasts, birds, fishes, flowers, etc., of this little-known region.

A story with a purpose; aims to show how a departure from the old conventional methods and an infusion of common-sense ideas into our educational methods would be productive of the most beneficial results. The author gives at the opening the picture of a country village school which, through lack of tact and knowledge on the part of teachers and of interest on the part of parents, had become almost worthless. A new teacher, with a mind and method of her own, is engaged for a term, and she sets at work with a determination to revolutionize the existing condition of things. It requires a good deal of tact and management to enlist parents and pupils in her plans, but she does it by quiet persistence, and the end of the term sees not only a remarkable change in the school, but in the village itself.

"The hero of the story, Dr. Quiès, is a wealthy Frenchman, a resident of a provincial town, who is addicted to archæology and has a mortal antipathy to travel. But in an unlucky hour he is induced to take a journey by rail some distance from home; and partly by the malicious contrivance of a rival archæologist who is jealous of his fame, and partly in consequence of a series of mishaps he becomes involved in a course of involuntary wanderings. These extend through France, across the Mediterranean into Algeria, across the Soudan, down the Nile, and into various parts of Eastern Europe. The book abounds in various parts of Eastern Europe. The book abounds in laughable situations, arising from the conflict between the doctor's desire to be at rest and the perverse fate which urges him on, and it will be read with unflagging interest. The illustrations are numerous and characteristic. The characteristic and the second s interest. The illustration istic."—Chicago Tribune.

25 C. Plain chant is that species of music which the Catholic Church has consecrated to the public celebration of the divine worship. This little treatise supplies a concise and easy explanation of the rules of this chant. It is divided into three parts. The first treats of the notation of plain chant, the second of the structure and peculiarities of the ecclesiastical modes or tenes; the third of psalmody.

The two parts of which this essay consists, originally published in the Nineteenth Century for April and May 1886, respectively, now reappear with the assent of the proprietor and editor of that periodical. Some passages of considerable length, which, with a view to needful brevity, were omitted when the articles first appeared, have been restored. Though the direct bearings of the arguments contained in this essay are biological, the argument contained in its first half has indirect bearings upon revenology, ethics, and sociology. psychology, ethics, and sociology.

Stolz, Alban. Give us this day our daily bread: being thoughts on the fourth petition of the Lord's prayer; tr. from the German; with preface by Rev. Andrew Melville. N. Y., A. C. Armstrong & Son, [1887.] 2-83 p. S. cl.,

Alban Stolz was one of the most eminent popular writers among German Catholics; he was a native of writers among German Catholics; he was a native of Bavaria, died in 1833. His books are read almost as much by the Protestants as the Catholics of Germany. They are characterized by a keen sense of humor, a cheerful good-nature, and a terse, incisive style, making them popular with all classes. These "thoughts" are taken from a work of Stolz's in which he expounds in a similar style each petition of the Lord's Prayer. Their is a child-like simplicity in the teachings which is very effective. The book is printed in pica type. The book is printed in pica type.

Storer, F: H. Agriculture in some of its relations with chemistry. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1887. c. 2 v., 9+529; 7+409 p. O.

Written in the interest of persons fond of rural affairs, and of students of agriculture. The book makes no special appeal to chemists or to students of chemistry. It is based upon lectures, suggestive rather than encyclopedic, which have been delivered annually by the author at the which have been delivered annually by the author at the Bussey Institution during the past sixteen years (1871-1887). These lectures, which have been many times altered and revised, were addressed to small classes of students of two distinct types, viz., first, young farmers and sons of farmers, familiar with the manual practice of agricultural operations, who were desirous of studying some of the sciences which bear most immediately upon the act of farming; and secondly city-bred man often the art of farming; and secondly, city-bred men, often graduates of the academic department of the University, who intended either to establish themselves upon farms to occupy country-seats, or to become landscapegardeners.

A social study that reaches the general conclusion that there is in ustice in the present relation of the employer and employee, but that it cannot be remedied by any of the existing organizations for that purpose. There is an excellent description of the origin and progress of a strike ordered by the "Knights of Labor." The romance is prestly the quite although the test of the back pretty, but quite subordinate to the object of the book.

Thomas à Kempis. Golden thoughts from the "Imitation of Christ;" selected by T. M. Lindsay, D.D. N. Y., A. C. Armstrong &

Son, [1887.] 3-95 p. S. cl., 50 c.
These "thoughts" have been taken from the first three books of the "Imitation of Christ," or, as it was called long ago, the "Musica Ecclesiastica" of Thomas à Kempis. The extracts are made from the old English edition of 1636, seldom altered. Printed in pica type.

"The story concerns an orphan girl who is ill-treated by her father's second wife, whom she believes for a long time her real mother. This woman deserts her, and the strength of the s time ner real mother. Inis woman deserts ner, and eventually reappears as a celebrated actress, when the true story of the girl's parentage is revealed. The heroine has a pair of lovers—the 'two gentlemen of Boston'—one of whom is good a d noble, and the other a fascinating, heartless man of the world, who is capable of loving no one but himself. The story shows, in many ing no one but nimself. . . . I he story snows, in many places, the result of the author's reading of other novelists, though there is no servile imitation in any case. One of the characters bears a resemblance to Rose Dartle, in 'David Copperfield,' and here and there we have a slight suggestion of 'Jane Eyre.' "-Boston Saturday Evening Gasette.

Two gentlemen of Gotham; by C. & C. N. Y., Cassell & Co., [1887.] c. 3+344 p. S. cl.,

Percy Aylmer and Sydney Harleston belong to the most fashionable New York circle. They are the heroes of this story, and though their adventures include some scenes of gaming and deep drinking, they are on the whole innocuous. Love and flirting occupy a large part in the story, with descriptions of luncheons, dinners, and receptions of the most gorgeous kind. A Russian prince, and two Wall St. kings, add interest and variety to the Wheelwright, J: T. A child of the century. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1887. c. 3-348 p.

D. cl., $1; pap., 50 c.

The "child of the century" is a Boston lawyer, who suddenly starts for Europe to look up an old friend. On the ship he meets his fate, but the course of love does not run smooth. Much good description and many theories of art, love, and life are interwoven into a cleverly told story.

Wood, H: Natural law in the business world. Bost., Lee & Shepard, 1887. c. 3-222 p. S.

The light of natural law is applied to the live, social, and economic topics which are now attracting so much attention. "It aims to expose the abuses and evils which masquerade under the banner of labor, and the bad results of class prejudice and antagonism. Labor combinations, and their effect on the laborer; socialistic tendencies; excess of economic and railroad legislation; the distribution of wealth; principles governing cor-porations and railroads, and also many other prominent issues, are fully and thoroughly examined, in their con-nection with unvarying natural laws and principles. It is shown clearly that the business world is permeated by natural law, and that success in any department can only be gained by conformity to it."

The Publishers' Weekly.

FOUNDED BY F. LEYPOLDT.

APRIL 2, 1887.

PUBLISHERS are requested to furnish title-page proofs and advance information of books forthcoming, both for entry in the lists and for descriptive mention. An early copy of each book published should be forwarded, to insure correctness in the final entry.

The trade are invited to send "Communications" to the editor on any topic of interest to the trade, and as to which an interchange of opinion is desirable. Also, matter for "Notes and Queries" thankfully received.

The editor does not hold himself responsible for the views expressed in contributed articles or communications.

"Every man is a debtor to his profession, from the which, as men do of course seek to receive countenance and profit, so ought they of duty to endeavor themselves by way of amends to be a help thereunto."—LORD BACON.

THE Century Magazine for April prints communications from twenty-two prominent American musicians, in response to a circular issued by the magazine on the subject of International Copyright. All of them, like the many communications and utterances from authors and publishers made public time and again, recognize "the pre-eminence of the ethical issue which is involved." This leads the editor of the Century to say:

Looking merely at the indifference of our legislators on this and other moral questions, one might think with Emerson that were it not for the widespread and unsophisticated sense of right which is shown by such protests as these from authors and composers, who, we are sure, are in this matter the truest representatives of American sentiment. How long will it be before Senators and members will recognize that this is primarily a moral rather than an economic question; and that the conviction of large classes of thoughtful people that we are pursuing a disgraceful policy is a source of weakness in the national self-respect for which legislators individually are every day newly responsible?

As we go to press we learn that the Murphy Bill to free the newspapers from the Manhattan News Co. monopoly (the text of which is given on another page) came up in the Senate. After discussion it was put on the order of third reading and sent to the Judiciary Committee, retaining its place on the calendar. It is expected to come up for passage soon, and once this bill becomes a law the people will be ready to take another step in the direction of reforming the methods of this corporation.

A MEMBER of the Legislature of Pennsylvania—the "Keystone State of Protection," as it has been called—recently introduced a bill forbidding a dry-goods dealer to sell books. The bill was referred to a committee, but never passed even a second reading, and so "paternalism" in one direction at 'least, was for once laid low. As the bill has not been printed, we must forego the pleasure of gratifying the curiosity of our readers as to the text of the measure that was intended to curb the ambitions of the linen-draper.

A COURSE of six lectures on literature from as many points of view are to be delivered at the Columbia College School of Library Economy, beginning April 2, at 4 o'clock P.M., when George Haven Putnam, of G. P. Putnam's Sons, will speak about "Literary Property from the Point of View of the Publisher." We hope to give an abstract, or report, of this lecture in our next issue. On April 15 and 16, at 3 and 4 o'clock P.M., respectively, Professor R. C. Davis, Librarian of the University of Michigan, will discuss "A Course of Reading" in two lectures. Another lecture will be by G. A. Scribner, Department of French at Columbia, who will speak of "Methods of Studying Literature," on April 23, at 10 o'clock A.M. "Book-buying and Bookbinding at 3 o'clock P.M. on April 22, and "What to Read, When to Read, How to Read," on April 23, at 4 o'clock P.M., both lectures by Ainsworth R. Spofford, Librarian of Congress, complete the entertaining programme. Any one interested may attend these lectures. Cards to the course may be had gratis by applying to Mr. Melvil Dewey, Columbia College, Madison Ave. and 49th St., N.Y.

LEGAL PUBLICATIONS IN 1886.

MESSRS. PUTTKAMMER & MUHLBRECHT, the well-known law booksellers of Berlin, have just issued their nineteenth annual "Uebersicht der gesammten Staats- und Rechtswissenschaftlichen Literatur." This survey of the legal publications of the year 1886 is compiled by that indefatigable bibliographer, Herr Otto Mühlbrecht, who prefixes to the handsomely printed volume an interesting statistical table of last year's output of works on jurisprudence in the various European countries. Shortly stated the number of legal publications issued in 1886 is as follows:

AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS.

MR. CHARLES SCRIBNER'S OPINION ON THE SUBJECT.

From the N. Y. Tribune, Mar. 27.

"I HAVE read with interest what has appeared on this subject in The Tribune. I suppose that what you refer to particularly is what Mr. Besant has to say on the phase of secret profits made by British publishers. The possibility of such profits comes from the system of division of profits, which American publishers do not adopt. Where, as in England, publisher and author divide profits, the publisher seeking to be dishonest, or desiring to make more profit, I will say, than the author is aware of, has it or may have it in his power to purchase his material or have his binding done, or both, at less rates than those represented to the author. By collusion, or otherwise, he may thus make the expense of a book greater than the open account shows, and thus he may secure an additional profit over that which is made apparent to the author, and thus the author may be defrauded of his dues

"In this country, however, and certainly in our own case, this phase of the matter is removed from controversy through the fact that the royalty system is used, the sharing of profits between publisher and author not being practised. publisher simply agrees to give the author a certain per cent. of the retail price of the work. course this system does not remove the opportunity or possibility of 'cooking the accounts' of the number of books sold. A firm may enter a less number of books sold than is actually the case, if it desires to defraud. But so far as I am aware there has been no complaint of this kind, no charge even pointing in that direction as regards the publishing-houses here well known in the trade. However, it is, perhaps, but just and fair that an author should have every proper opportunity to satisify himself fully that he is receiving his royalty upon the number of books to which he is actually entitled by sale. may do this he must needs have opportunity to ascertain through inspection of books or by actual count the number of books received from the bindery by the publisher and the number the publisher actually sells. We ourselves, irrespective of the present discussion of this matter, have been arranging to afford an opportunity of this kind to the authors whose works we sell. will have the chance, if they so desire, to inspect the 'returns' for themselves, and satisfy themselves of the precise sale of their works. To be sure, even this opportunity would not prevent, necessarily, the possibility of an under-statement of the number of books taken from the bindery, yet it would afford, as far as is possible, a full protection to the author. Our action is not the result of any complaint from any author or of any expressed desire on the part of any one for this arrangement, but we have made it in order to indicate our desire that the author should feel that at all times he is at liberty to inspect the books for himself, and thus have all possible assurance that he is receiving what is due him. In the case of foreign authors any representative they may choose here may examine the books and secure all information desired which will throw light on his particular account.

"In this country there has been no complaint, so far as I have learned, that the author does not receive his royalty on the full number of books sold. The only bone of contention is, on the law makes possible the publication of four part of the author, that he does not receive a sufficiently high per cent. on the retail price. Well, the market is an open one, and the author is at liberty to choose his own publisher. If, then, the publisher were making more than a fair profit, some other publisher could afford to give the author a larger royalty, and he would do so. Competition rules among publishers, as well as with other people. Publishers have found that fifteen per cent. on the retail price is all that they can afford to pay. Now, supposing that a book retails at a dollar, many an author will look at the bare sum and say that for him to toil and agitate his brain and his imagination in producing a work which sells at one hundred cents, while the author gets only fifteen of them, is unjust and that he does not get a proper remuneration.

"Let us look at it, taking the $1 book as a ba-The retail dealer has to have a discount of 40 per cent. at least. The publisher therefore receives The cost to him of the manufacture of the book is on the average 25 cents. Addin: the author's 15 cents and 20 cents is left for the publisher. But that is not profit. He has to pay for his plant out of that, which consists in the plates, and probably a thousand copies have to be sold first to enable him to make that up. there is the advertising. Suppose he puts out only $10 in advertising in one paper, we will say: if his profits are 10 cents a volume, he must sell 100 copies to make that amount good. Then there is his rent, his salaries to pay, the whole expense of his business. Taking all this into consideration, you can readily perceive how it is that publishers come to the conclusion that a royalty of fifteen per cent. is about all they can afford to pay. But there is another important feature of this matter. There was a time when a $1 book was considered a cheap affair. nowadays the tendency is to paper-bound volumes, at 50, 25, 20, and even 10 cents. paper-covered volumes are handled by the news companies largely, and neither the American, the Union (which supplies trains exclusively), the Manhattan, the New England, nor any other of these companies will handle these volumes except on a discount of 50 per cent., and on sale at that. Being received on sale, many of these volumes are returned soiled, and thus rendered al-most valueless. You perceive what a reduction of profits all this makes.

"The want of an international copyright is working a great injury to publishers as well as authors in the matter of foreign works. For instance, there is Mr. Stevenson's 'Merry Men,' which we were selling at 50 cents, and for each copy sold we allowed the author 15 per cent. But the sale of the work is virtually dead, so far as we are concerned. You have observed that one firm of publishers now sells four of Mr. Stevenson's works in one volume for 20 cents. Any firm in this country can do the same thing, and no other publisher can reasonably find fault that it is done, under the existing statutes. Stevenson is now getting nothing, and this is particularly hard upon him, for he is not a rich man, and pens most of his work on his couch, as he is an invalid. But with six editions of his works in the field here, he can get no royalty on the sales, enormous as they are, for Stevenson's works are now the most popular here of all liv Stevenson's novels in one volume, all for 20 cents' You can readily perceive that a sale thus rendered large through the want of statutory protection tends to shut out home products through the very cheapness of the article, thus not only depriving the British author of his dues but interfering with the sale of American novels.

" If authors would look carefully into all these points, bearing in mind, also, the risks which publishers assume in launching a work, as well as the other points to which I have called attention, they cannot but see that they are being pretty well treated here. I see only one way to afford them larger profits; and that is for the retail dealer to demand a smaller discount. But these dealers declare that this is impossible. They, too, have privileged classes who demand a discount in turn. Clergymen, school-teachers, and various other classes of people have to have, say, a $1 book for 80 cents at least; so that if the retail dealer gets only 20 per cent. off, his profits are largely eaten up. Certainly the publisher cannot produce the book more cheaply than he has been doingat least no way to that result has as yet been discovered—and no larger loyalty can safely be al-There are exceplowed, at least on the average. tions for special reasons, in all matters. only way in which the author can, therefore, secure a greater royalty is to effect an increase in retail prices or prevail upon retail dealers to be content with a less discount. I know that authors often think that their works should bring them in a larger royalty, but, as I have already said, the market is an open one and they have opportunity to deal with competing houses. So far as this firm is concerned, the authors of works published by us will now have full opportunity to look into their accounts with us, and satisfy themselves, if they wish, regarding the extent of the sales of their works; and although there have been no complaints made on this score, I trust that they will not hesitate to assure themselves by personal inspection that they are receiving their royalties according to the number of books sold. They get their royalty whether we secure payment from our sales or not; so that the publisher is also the protector of the author as well as his agent in placing his works before the public."

THE ELEVATED NEWS MONOPOLY.

On March 26 Senator Murphy, of the New York Legislature, offered a bill calculated to induce the News Company of the elevated railroads of New York to allow the sale of newspapers under more favorable conditions than heretofore. The bill is numbered 612, and is now in the Committee of the Whole. The full text of the bill is as follows:

SECTION 1. Section 1945 of the laws of 1882 of the New York Consolidation Act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

York Consolidation Act is nereby amended so as to read as follows:

Section 1945 It shall not be lawful for any company organized under the provisions of Chapter 606 of the laws of 1875, or under any other act passed before June 18, 1875, "to prevent the sale of newspapers in or upon property belonging to such company by any vender of such newspaper, nor shall it be lawful" to construct a steam railway upon St. Nicholas Avenue, or those streets or avenues in said city commonly known as boulevards, except to cross the same, under such regulations as shall be imposed by the Commissioners provided for by said act, and every such company shall be bound by the restrictions and limitations as to its route and as to its mode of construction, which shall be established by the commission appointed under the acts from which its powers were derived, as far as such restrictions and limitations are consistent with the provisions of this section shall not be deemed to apply to any street railway existing on June 18, 1875, and heretofore authorized to be constructed.

Sec. 2. This act shall take effect immediately.

COMPULSORY DEPOSIT OF BOOKS IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

From the London Publishers' Circular, March 15.

ALTHOUGH the fact has not been generally published, we may state that the Copyright Association has for some time past been investigating certain questions with regard to the compulsory deposit of books at the British Museum. The questions do not refer to the acknowledged privileges of the British Museum in so far as native works are concerned, These requisitions upon authors and publishers in the present state of affairs are incontestable.

Of late years, however, there has been a large and increasing importation of American books of the higher order in the different branches of learning. For the convenience of the public the custom has been for English publishers to place their imprint upon the title-pages of such books. Being in most cases expensive, there is generally a limited sale.

It was thought advisable to try this question, as well as some others, by test cases. Instead of, or before taking this course, however, the opinion of counsel was sought. We regret that this opinion has, in the meantime, been declared in favor of the claims of the British Museum in so far as the delivery of American books is concerned. We print the questions put to counsel and the opinions thereon:

(1) Whether a copy imported from New York of the book "X" first published there by New York publishers, such copy being one of a certain number imported by a London firm of publishers for sale in the United Kingdom, and bearing their imprint on the title-page, must be delivered at the British Museum under 5 & 6 Vic. cap. 45, sec. 6. Counsel's opinion.—Yes.

(2) Whether a copy of a reprint published in the United Kingdom of a foreign book, i. e., of a book first published abroad—not possessing copyright in England under the International Copyright Acts must be delivered to the British Museum under the said Act of 5 & 6 Vic. cap. 45, sec. 6.

Counsel's opinion.—Yes.

(3) Whether a copy of the new edition of "Y" by a late English author, the imperial copyright in the original book which was duly deposited having expired, and the new edition being merely a reprint without additions and alterations of the original book, or of an edition thereof already deposited, must be delivered to the British Museum under the said Act of 5 & 6 Vic. cap. 45, sec. 6.

Counse.'s opinion.—No, there being no alterations or additions.

(4) Whether a copy of a reprint published in the United Kingdom of a book originally possessing imperial copyright under the International Copyright Acts and Conventions, but in which such copyright has expired, must be delivered to the British Museum under the said Act of 5 & 6 Vic. cap. 42, sec. 6.

Counsel's opinion.—No, if the book was originally delivered to the British Museum and the reprint contains no alterations or additions. Yes, if the reprint contains alterations or additions.

We must add that the construction of the important sec. 6 of the 5th and 6th Vic. cap. 45, is not particularly clear; therefore, it might be advisable that a test case should be brought before the court in relation to imported books. It must be remembered that the British Museum does not stand upon the same footing as the other privileged libraries. Under the law the Museum is entitled to a copy of the best edition of every book published in the United Kingdom, delivered at the British Museum. The other libraries, only on demand, are entitled to books printed upon the paper of which the largest number of copies of such books or editions shall be printed for sale. As an interval of twelve months is allowed after publication, cheap editions may therefore be sent to these libraries.

OBITUARY NOTES.

THE REV. DR. RAY PALMER, the author of the well-known hymn, "My Faith Looks up to Thee," and a number of others, died in Newark N. J., on March 29, aged 79 years. Among his published books were "Memoirs of Charles Pond," 1829; "How to Live," "Doctrinal Text-Book," and "Spiritual Improvement," 1839; "Hints on the Formation of Religious Opinions," 1860; and "Hymns and Sacred Pieces," 1865.

W. T. MACAULEY, formerly of the firm of Macauley Brothers, Detroit, Mich., died at Pasadena, Cal., on March 5. Mr. Macauley was born in Rochester, N. Y., in 1846, and entered the booktrade as a boy in the store of Adams & Ellis. He was afterward in the employ of Steele & Avery, and George W. Fisher. After the war, in 1865, he was in the employ of Bielock & Co. at Annapolis, Md., but Southern chills drove him back to Rochester, where he began business for himself in 1866, continuing there until 1872, when he removed his stock to Detroit, joining his brother, J. F. Macauley, forming the firm of Macauley Brothers, which partnership lasted until failing health necessitated his removal to Denver, Col., in 1883.

JOHN GODFREY SAXE, the noted wit and poet, died in Albany, N. Y., on the 31st of March in his seventy-first year. Mr. Saxe was born in Vermont in 1816. In his early years he was a lawyer and newspaper editor. After 1858 he devoted himself exclusively to literature and lecturing. He was chiefly noted as a writer of humorous poetry. His witty rhymes brought him fame and wealth. He published quite a number of volumes of poetry and stories, and was a large contributor to the periodical press.

JOURNALISTIC NOTES.

Scribner's Magazine is to be represented in Chicago by Mr. J. B. Carrington, who has been for the past three years in charge of S. A. Maxwell & Co.'s library department.

The Open Court is the title of a new fortnightly publication issued at Chicago, whose leading work it declares to be "to continue the work of The Index." It inclines to philosophic discussion of social problems and will no doubt appeal strongly to the mass of sober and dispassionate freethinkers.

NOTES ON AUTHORS.

THE family of Edwin M, Stanton, the War Secretary, have intrusted to the hands of George C. Gorham, formerly the Secretary of the United States Senate, the preparation of a biography of their distinguished relative. All the private papers have been placed at Mr. Gorham's disposal, and it is believed that a great deal of important historical matter will come to light in the pages of this work.

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

Mr. H. O. HOUGHTON is travelling in Southern California and Mexico.

Mr. Herbert M. Caldwell, of the Worthington Co., will represent H. Altemus, of Philadelphia, after April 1.

The Public Service Publishing Co., N. Y. have in press "Letters from the Far East," by Col. De Lancy Floyd-Jones, U. S. A. It will contain a number of full-page illustrations from photographs collected en route.

It is said that the second volume of Mr. Beecher's "Life of Christ" was so nearly completed that the final chapters can be easily prepared for the press. C. L. Webster & Co. made him a first payment of $5000 on account shortly before his death. An article on his experience in England, to be published in the Century, was his last work, and was left about half finished. The autobiography had not been touched.

R. S. Peale & Co., of Chicago, are to be the publishers of General Logan's book, "The Volunteer Soldier of America." The publishers amounce that no expense will be spared in presenting this work, special attention being give to the illustrations, but that the price will lower than other subscription books of single-character. The volume will also contain a Biographical Memoir by the author's literary executor, Dr. C. A. Logan.

MR. R. H. TILLEY, Newport, R. I., is preparing for publication his "Genealogical Queries" for 1887, and desires all who intend to insert queries therein to send them as soon as possible. His purpose is to have it ready and distributed by June 1, sending a copy to each public library, State library, historical society, and every person known to be interested in genealogy in the United States and Canada. One hundred and three copies will also be sent to England.

This characteristic incident is going the rounds and shows the spirit which undoubtedly rankles in many a heart after a like rebuff. It is amusing, even if not true: "The Harpers recently declined a manuscript, whereupon the irate author wrote: 'You are a mean set. I did think of naming my baby "Harper," and should have done so if my story had been accepted; but now no baby of mine shall bear the name of Harper. You are all a mean set.'"

"EVERY week," says the Photographic News, "adds to the new uses to which photography is being put. It is now employed by at least one enterprising London bookseller to assist in the advertising of new books. His plan is to display in a prominent place a framed announcement of a just published volume, and, in association with it, to exhibit a large photograph of the author. Thus, the advertisement of the Laureate's new volume of poems is headed by a capital cabinet portrait of Lord Tennyson; whilst interest in Mr. Browning's coming book is stimulated by an excellent photographic presentment of the author of 'The Ring and the Book."

IGNATIUS DONNELLY'S much-talked-of Shakespeare, or rather Baconian, cipher may be looked for in July. He accounts for the delay by saying that "the work is vaster than I imagined. I started out with an expectation of finding two or three cipher-words on each page, then I advanced to a dozen or two, then to a score or two, then I thought the cipher-words were one-fifth of the text, according to Bacon's cipher rule, where he tells us 'the writing infolding holdeth a quintuple relation to the writing infolded.' Now I find that more than half the words are cipherwords, and that many words, as in the sample given, in Shakesperiana* are made to do double and treble duty. In the plays of first and second Henry IV., Bacon intended to leave, for the astonishment of all time, a piece of work the most ingenious and marvellous ever constructed by the wit of man. How any human intellect could have achieved such a work is a matter of daily surprise to me. I could not believe it myself if my arithmetical rule, applied with the utmost rigidity and precision, did not prove it to me every hour of the day. Imagination! There isn't any more imagination in the work I am doing than there is in the labors of a first-class bookkeeper in a mercantile establishment, and my work will prove itself just as his does, by the fact that every other man, going over it carefully, must reach the same results."

THOMAS WHITTAKER will issue at once the initial volume of the new Theological Educator series entitled "A Manual of Christian Evidences," by the Rev. C. A. Row. This series will give solid and trustworthy grounding in all branches of theological knowledge treated by the best minds with freshness and ripe scholarship. The volumes will appear monthly, the next being "An Introduction to the Textual Criticism of the New Testament, by the Rev. Prof. B. B. Warfield, D.D., of Princeton, followed by "A Hebrew Grammar," by the Rev. W. H. Lowe, Hebrew Lecturer, Christ College, Cambridge. Mr. Whittaker will also publish "Echoes of Bible History," by the Rt. Rev. W. Pakenham Walsh, D.D., with fifty illustrations, which will be a popular readable account of the remarkable discoveries made in Eastern lands, more especially in Chaldea, Egypt, and Palestine. which have thrown so much light and corroboration around the Bible narrative; "Job and Solo-mon, or, the Wisdom of the Old Testament," by the Rev. Dr. T. K. Cheyne; "Bread in the Desert and other Sermons," by the Rev. Randolph H. McKim, Rector of Trinity Church, New Orleans, "Sermons for Children," by the Rev. Samuel Cox, D.D., of "Expositor" fame (the third series of Dr. Cox's "Expositions," being the volume for 1887, will be ready about May 1st); "Future Retribution Viewed in the Light of Reason and Revelation," by the Rev. C. A. Row, one of the first theologians of England; "Daily Prayers for Younger Boys," by the Rev. Wm. Baker, D.D.; "Sermon Briefs for the Christian Year by an Experienced English Preacher;" "The Bishops in the Tower," being another of Canon Luckock's historical studies in English eclesiastical epochs; Dr. Robert B. Fairbairn's, "Of the Doctrine of Morality in relation to Christian Redemption and Grace," which promises to be a much needed work on ethical Christianity from the Churchman's standpoint. The same publisher also promises Bishop Richard Hooker Wilmer's "Reminiscences of a Grandfather," a book that bids fair to be very interesting. It will be dedicated to Mr. Jefferson Davis. In juvenile works, Mr. Whittaker will issue "Fighting the Sea, or, winter at the life-saving station," by Edward A. Rand; also "Dinah a child's story by "Brenda." Mite,

THE Pall Mall Gazette's "interview" with Messrs. Chatto & Windus brings out the statement that Mark Twain gets from these English publishers royalties on his books amounting to over $5000 a year.

WARD & DOWNEY, London, will publish shortly a new work on Russian and French prisons, by Prince Krapotkine, who will be able to speak with the authority of personal acquaintance. The book will contain a plan of the fortress and prison of St. Peter and St. Paul.

SAMPSON LOW & Co. will publish shortly a work entitled "The Rothschilds, the Financial Rulers of Nations," by John Reeves, in which will be given portraits of the chief members of the family and a view of the original house of the founder of Frankfort.

FISHER UNWIN will publish shortly a work on "Anne Gilchrist: her life and writings," edited by her son, Mr. Herbert H. Gilchrist, and prefaced by a "Notice" by Mr. W. M. Rossetti. The work ought to prove of more than ordinary interest, as besides Mrs. Gilchrist's own correspondence it will contain many letters from Carlyle and his wife, from the Rossetti family, George Eliot, G. H. Lewes, Walt Whitman, and others, nearly all of which have never yet been published. The conversations of Mr. and Mrs. Gilchrist with Carlyle are said to be a feature in the work, which contains several portraits and other illustrations.

ELEMENTS OF PHYSIOLOGICAL PSYCHOLOGY.

A Treatise of the Activities and Nature of the Mind, from the Physical and Experimental Point of View. By George J. Ladd, Professor of Philosophy in Yale University. With numerous illustrations. 1 vol., 8vo, $4.50.

The study of the human mind from the physiological side or point of view is the most interesting and fruitful subject that has come before the philosophical student of our day. Prof. Ladd's is the first treatise that presents a full discussion of the whole subject brought down to the most recent times. It includes the latest discoveries, and by numerous illustrations and tables, and by gathering material from hundreds of separate sources, it brings before the reader in a compact and yet lucid form the entire subject.

CRITICAL NOTES

On the International Sunday-School Lessons from the Pentateuch. By Professor S. R. DRIVER, Christ Church, Oxford. 1 vol., 12mo, flexible cloth, 75 cents, net.

In these expository notes the English reader is for the first time put in possession, in a popular form, of the results of the best scholarship of our day in the widest sense, bearing upon the critical study of the Pentateuch. Professor Driver is one of the most eminent of modern Hebrew scholars, and in this book he has presented the conclusions to which the higher criticism has led many of our soundest scholars. His position is not extreme, and there is nothing to offend a reverent student of the Bible, though there is much that will be new to most readers.

THE GREVILLE MEMOIRS.

NOW COMPLETE.

THE GREVILLE MEMOIRS consists of Three Parts, or Five Volumes, as follows:

PART FIRST.

A Journal of the Reigns of King George IV. and King William IV. By the late Charles Greville, Clerk of the Council to those Sovereigns. Edited by Henry Reeve, Registrar of the Privy Council. Two vols., 12mo, cloth, $4.00.

"Since the publication of Horace Walpole's Letters, no book of greater historical interest has seen the light than the Greville Memoirs. It throws a curious, and, we may almost say, a terrible light on the conduct and character of the public men in England under the reigns of George IV. and William IV. Its descriptions of those kings and their kinsfolk are never likely to be forgotten."—New York Times.

PART SECOND.

A Journal of the Reign of Queen Victoria, from 1837 to 1852. The "Greville Memoirs," Second Part. By the late Charles Greville, Clerk of the Council. Uniform with Part First. Two vols., 12mo, cloth, $4.00.

"Mr. Greville's Diary is one of the most important contributions which have ever been made to the political history of the middle of the nineteenth century. He is a graphic and powerful writer; and his usual habit of making the record while the impression of the events was fresh upon his mind gives his sketches of persons and places, and his accounts of conversations, great vividness. The volumes will be read with as much interest for their sketches of social life as for their political value."—London Daily News.

PART THIRD (just published).

A Journal of the Reign of Queen Victoria, from 1852 to 1860. By the late Charles Greville, Clerk of the Council. Being third and concluding part of the "Greville Memoirs." One vol., 12mo, cloth, $2.00.

The volume now published, in addition to personal anecdotes, deals with many important events, such, for instance, as the re-establishment of the French Empire, the Crimean War, the Indian Mutiny, and the Italian War.

.. The work complete, in Five Volumes, put up in box. Price, $10.00.

A NUMBER of irate bibliophiles, according to the London correspondent of The Book-Buyer, are about to start a publication called The Book-Stealer. It will contain the names and addresses of the borrowers of books, the date of borrowing, and graphic descriptions of the state of volumes returned—if such an occurrence should by any chance happen.

The editor is Mrs. Margret Holmes, author of "The Chamber Over the Gate," which was one of the successes of last season, and judging by this work it is safe to conclude that the Tatler will be "honest and outspoken, or it will be nothing," as it promises in its neatly worded Salutatory. A special Easter edition is promised, which is to be a double number and furnish unusual attractions, besides the short stories, literary and theatrical criticisms. items, of news, etc., that fill the eight threecolumn pages of its first issue.

The throne of the fisherman, built by the carpenter's son; the root, the bond, and the crown of Christendom. N. Y., Catholic Pub. Soc. Co., 1887. 24+555 p. O. cl., net, $2.80

This work begins with a short review of the "witness of history during eighteen centuries to the See of St. Peter: its divine institution, its acceptance by the [Roman Catholic] Church, and the manifold support given to man catholic charch, and the mainted support given in it during so many centuries by Providence, as shown in the acts both of foes and of friends. In two chapters which follow, the author, planting himself upon the Nicene Council, retraces the history of the three preced-ing centuries in their action upon the church's hierarchy. For this purpose he makes a careful analysis of the constitution which that council shows to have been in operation when it was held. After this, eight chapters are devoted to the unfolding of the church's constitution, from the Nicene Council to that of Chalcedon."

It must not be inferred, however, that, in denying that the Apostle John wrote the book, he also denies its inspiration, this he maintains, although with limitations. In the notes, we have frequently given the arguments on an opposite side, mostly from some of the later standard authorities. S. cl., $1.80; pap., $1. The scene is laid in Memphis, A.D. 1643. Many incidents in the life of Mukaukus George and his son Orion, the uprising of the Moslems, famine and the plague caused by the failure of the Nile to inundate, forecast the tragic event of the story. The Egyptians clamor for the revival of the ancient heathen rite of casting a beautiful maiden into the depths of the Nile to appease the wrath of the river god. Paula, the betrothed of Orion, is chosen, and great pomp attends the approaching ceremony. Paula is arrayed in fitting raiment, but events transpire which prevent Paula from being the victim, although the Nile received its bride, and to this day the people of Cairo commemorate the event by placing a figure of clay on the banks of the Nile on the night of its dropping. This is called the Aroosa or bride. The splendors of Memphis are portrayed, and the several religious factions of the time introduced. They are the Moslems, the Jacobite Christians, and the Melchites. the Jacobite Christians, and the Melchites.

"These volumes have a field of their own. They are not meant to take the place of such works as Stanley's 'History of the Jewish church' or Geikie's 'Hours with the Bible.' They are meant for a large class of readers to whom a briefer and simpler treatment of Old Testiment facts and themes will prove more acceptable, and which, written in popular style and with a stamp of originality in their method of handling Biblical suljects, will, we venture to hope, prove to the mass of readers less tedious than a detailed history, and more attractive than voluminous dissertations on ancient institutions, manvoluminous dissertations on ancient institutions, manners, customs, etc."—Introductory note.

Presents, like many other of Mr. Hardy's novels, a study of an out-of-the-way corner of the south of England, and of a phase of industry now almost passed away. The "woodlanders" are the principal characters, people living meagrely on a mere pittance gained by hard manual labor. "Marty South," one of the three heroines, and the lowest in the social grade, is a fine study of unselfish womanhood. Her love, with its tragical close, is the leading theme. Since then the work has been carefully revised and considerable matter added, especially to the last chapter, which relates to the future of the church. The line of argument throughout this study is that the "Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world" has been seen in the East, and that the true way to make disciples of all nations is by declaring unto them Jesus as Agni, Brahma, Buddha, or Sosios, as he was first declared to the Jew as the Christ. Roberts, C: G. D. In divers tones. Bost., D. Lothrop & Co., [1887.] c. '86. 7+134 p. D.

In this pleasant volume of verse the utterances of a true lover of nature and of song may be recognized. The author, who is professor of English literature at King's College, Windsor, Nova Scotia, is a native of New Brunswick, and he finds in his own land and surroundings his best inspiration. There is nothing better in the boo than those poems which describe the picturesque land-scape of certain portions of the province. In "The Tantramar revisited" the local color is true and strong.

The author of "California" in the American Common mealth Series has used his knowledge of the geography, history, and peculiar customs of that state as a background for a remarkable character study of human plans and mostives. The well-worn subject of a ground-claim making lasting trouble between families is here used to bring into relief the strong individualities of four men and three women. The editor, Boscowitz, and Margaret Eddon, the loved, unloving wife, are specially well drawn. Several important social questions are discussed. The story in worth a careful reading.

Makes good a real deficiency, namely, that of a fairly adequate and exhaustive dictionary of recent and contemporary biography, including foreign as well as national celebrities. The greater lights or the century have been treated with some fulness; those of minor importance with conciseness. The aim has also been to make the articles something better than mere strings of facts and dates, while avoiding on the one hand flippant expressions of individual opinions, on the other empty eulogy. As a rule those who merely survived the year 1800 have either been excluded or treated with great brevity. The wants of the average reader have been consulted as far as possible in drawing up the lists of names—utility rather than completeness being the object chiefly kept in view. The editor has had an able staff of assistants in his work. A handsome double-column volume.

This handbook, written by the first of living Dante scholars, contains everything necessary to enable the student to study intelligently the supreme Christian poet—"the voice of ten silent centuries." It is divided into two parts, the first treating of Dante's life; the second, of his works. In neither is there omitted any really important fact. To every section is appended a valuable bibliographic apply, and these bibliographies, taken together, form a excellent catalogue of a Dante library. The work we plies a real desideratum in English literature, which is singularly deficient in works on Dante, suitable for stu-dents. The translator's notes and additions will, it is hoped, add to the value of the book for American students.

The author of "Aldersyde" again tells a story of beautiful Scotch scenery and Scotch people who speak their vernacular. The birth of twin boys costs their mother's life. The father, persuaded that his wife has only "gone b fore," takes comfort in his boys and brings them up, one to be a clergyman, the other a farmer. Both show scholastic tastes and the farmer becomes a reporter and afterwards an author. The two girls who play their parts in the brothers' lives are exquisitely pictured. The "Gates of Eden" would seem to be the state of happiness in which the reader leaves the chief actors at the close.

"Daffodils provides the title for a dainty volume of equally dainty poems by Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney. The characteristics of the author's muse—simplicity, sincerity, and naturalness—are manifested at their fullest in the poetry of this book. Delicacy of fancy, sweetness of feeling, and grace of imagination are also to be found here in abundance. The sentiment is always tender or uplifting, and both diction and versification are as flowing as they are unconventional. The book is beautifully as they are unconventional. THE ANNUAL CATALOGUE.

WE are glad to announce that the Annual American Catalogue, 1886, is at last an accomplished fact, and that copies are now in course of delivery. Those of our subscribers who have not yet received their copies will please understand that it is for lack of shipping directions as to how they should be sent, and are requested to give word to us at once.

We regret exceedingly to have occasion to apologize for the delay of this Catalogue, and for the disappointing appearance of the photographic The plates made by photography have by no means come up to the samples submitted to us, and it has been impossible to do the work a second time without delays which would interfere still more with the practical value of the work. The company with which we had made arrangements to do the work had changed hands during the time, and the original contracts have, we regret to say, not been properly fulfilled as to promptness or quality of work. We recognize fully that the value of such a catalogue depends upon prompt issue, and we have made arrangements to electrotype titles hereafter from week to week, so that at the end of the year they may rapidly be re-arranged and the Annual Catalogue be issued with the utmost promptness. This re-arrangement of printed titles will be a new experiment in publishing, and we shall ourselves look forward to its results with much interest. All the same we believe that this photographic process, properly done, will ultimately prove of great value in cataloguing and library work, particularly in the making of catalogues for small libraries by clipping the entries and notes of larger libraries and re-pasting together.

A disadvantage typographically in this last year's titles also demands apology, arising from a change of type during the middle of the year, when new type throughout of a slightly different font replaced the type we had previously Of course the old type looks worse by used. the contrast.

We regret to say that in regard to the financial support of the undertaking we have the same old story to tell. The advance subscriptions covered the cost of the book as it was planned, but as usual in cataloguing work the outlay has far exceeded the original estimate. The result has been that to give adequate remuneration for the work will require the sale of the entire edition. edition is limited, and the greater part of it has been taken up. The book which we have presented to the trade is, we believe, well worth the price put upon it, and we trust to find it sufficiently appreciated throughout the trade not only to recoup the work put upon it, but to make its continuance in successive years assured.

In accordance with some suggestions made by subscribers, we have arranged with the publishers of the Annual English Catalogue to exchange sheets, and we are thus enabled to supply in sheets or bound together both the American and English Catalogues for 1886, so that one referencebook contains the record of the book-production of the English-speaking world.

CATALOGUE OF GOVERNMENT PUB-LICATIONS.

WE print the following circular published by Mr. J. M. Hickcox, 906 M Street, Washington, D. C., in full, in the hope that those who may as yet be unacquainted with the work may avail themselves of the opportunity of subscribing. Booksellers, especially, will find this list invaluable, directing them, as it does, to a line of books concerning which information is not always, and never easily, obtainable. Mr. Hickcox has opportunities for doing the work exhaustivly, and that he does it well may be judged from the numbers he has already issued.

WASHINGTON, April 2, 1887.

It was originally intended that this periodical should be published with regularity and promptness at least once in each month. This intention has not been carried out because the low price of subscription has been found only sufficient to pay the bare cost of printing. It is absolutely necessary in order to secure practical utility, that the original design should be rigorously adhered to.

Many publications of the Government are of the highest importance, and it frequently happens that the existence of a valued work is not generally known until the edition printed for distribution is exhausted. The experience of many librarians and numerous other individuals will corroborate this statement.

Again: Section 3809 of the Revised Statutes provides that:

"If any person desiring extra copies of any document printed at the Government Printing Office by authority of law shall, previous to its being put to press, notify the Congressional Printer of the number of copies wanted, and shall pay to him, in advance, the estimated cost there-of, and ten per centum thereon, the Congressional Printer may, under the direction of the Public Printing, furnish the same. under the direction of the Joint Committee on

The public at large derives no advantage from this valuable privilege, because information is not given as to the documents about to be issued by the Government. In future, this omission will be supplied by this journal—a feature which it is believed will be appreciated by many and particularly by members of the book-trade, who will thereby be enabled to secure at cost price many works of increasing value, such as the Reports of the Court of Claims, Decisions of the Land, Patent, and Pension Offices, Opinions of the Attorney-General, Catalogue of the Army Medical Library, and other works of a scientific and technical character, not published as public documents for free distribution. Many instances might be cited where the absence of this information has resulted in great inconvenience and pecuniary loss to libraries, individuals, and dealers, from a failure to secure continuity in serial publications.

In order to carry out these needed reforms, it will be necessary to increase the subscription price of this monthly to an amount which will yield a partial compensation to the editor for services which will require his entire time and attention. It is gratifying to be able to state that our subscription list has steadily increased, but at no time (as already stated) has it yielded an income more than sufficient to pay the printer.

The price for volume 3 (1887) will be $5. Vol. 1 (as soon as number 2 is reprinted) and Vol. 2 will be supplied at $3 each. Libraries will find it largely to their interest and convenience to sustain this publication, and it is earnestly solicited that our friends will be prompt in renewing their subscriptions. The numbers for January, February, and March, 1887, are in preparation.

With this circular is issued numbers 7-12 of the second volume, dated July-December, 1886, and a supplement which includes titles of all the public acts passed at the second session of the 49th Congress, ended March 4, 1887.

AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS.

OPINIONS OF SOME AMERICAN PUBLISHERS.

From the N. Y. Tribune, April 3.

MR. J. W. HARPER, JR., of Harper & Bros., referring to interviews with Charles Scribner, as printed in the Tribune and reprinted in the Pub-LISHERS' WEEKLY for April 2, said, so far as the firm of Harper & Bros. was concerned, it had few accounts on the half-profit basis, and he added:

"I recall to mind, indeed, only one such account, and that is with the estate of an author now dead. American publishers generally avoid this system, for the reason, in part, I presume, that it involves a great amount of detail. royalty account has been substituted in this country. As for this firm, we have had a great deal of experience with English publishers, and we have never had the least trouble with regard to their statements of accounts. English publishers publish some books for us on joint account, and we for them; we have had no occasion to complain." It was suggested to Mr. Harper that a potent reason for this might be the fact that such a firm as Harper & Brothers could not be imposed upon by false accounts, whereas the author, more a creature of the imagination than an expert accountant, might not see through the devious ways and means of modern book-keeping.

"No," replied he, "that is not the reason. The real reason is that at least all leading and wellknown publishers or business men transact business on an honest basis. In order to render false accounts, there must be a pretty large-sized conspiracy; there must be collusion at least. publisher must have a corrupt understanding with an entry clerk or stock clerk, or with his binder when he has his book bound outside; and the binder, in turn, must have a like understanding with an employé. Now how long could a publisher doing that kind of work retain a reputation as an honest man? Dishonesty always defeats itself ultimately, and dishonest methods will become known. I think the charges made in England against British publishers on this score are without just foundation.

" To go a little into detail, to show how impossible it is for the author to be deceived as to the number of his books sold, let me first ask: How could a publisher cheat a client except through his clerks, his printers, or his warehousemen? The authorought to have the same access to the edition books as the publisher, and probably every publisher is willing that he should have. In careful printing-offices the exact edition ordered often overruns, so that an edition of 1000 will sometimes make 1030. In these offices they generally "gather," as the term is, all the way from twenty to thirty copies more than the thousand ordered for the edition. Sometimes they fall short, as there may be an imperfect sheet, or for some other reason. Now a "token" is 250 impressions. The printers feed eleven quires, which, being of twenty-four sheets each, give 264 sheets. On a "token," then, there are fourteen copies over, and on a thousand impressions the total number overrun is fifty-six without allowing for The exact number over or under, howwaste. ever, always appears on the record of delivery from the bindery.

"But even if a publisher had no self-respect, is it probable that he would leave himself open to his own employes, and be known to them as 16,305 16,253 dishonest man? I see no way in which accounts could be falsified except through collusion with a large number of people. When an author's statement is to be made out, the number of copies on hand at the rendering of the last statement is put down, the number printed since and the number now on hand; and the result is thus reached, showing the number sold. Say that the number last on hand, suppose on October 1, 1886, was 400; that on February 1, 1887, an edition of 2000 was published; this gives a total of 2400. Now how do we find the number on hand? We count the number in the bins and in the warerooms. Suppose there are 250 in the bins and the same number in the warerooms-a total of 500. Deduct this from 2400 and we find that 1900 copies have been disposed of, whether sold or given away or stolen. Where, then, can dishonesty come into play except through an extended collusion? There is not an author who cannot come here and have access to the books just as freely as the publisher himself. Of course there are rascals in all trades, but they bear their own reputation with them. There has been no complaint, so far as I know, that American publishers have falsified accounts.

"The royalty paid to the author owning his own plates and copyright is obviously larger than when the publisher assumes the whole risk. A number of years ago some authors would own the plates, and were paid for the whole edition when printed, say every 1000 or 750, in advance. Whether the publisher sold the whole edition or not, the author got the money. I do not know that this is done much now. I think that Irving did this, and Prescott; and this plan was not unusual with other authors of that time. If the books were popular, the author would make more by paying for his own plates. As a rule the author prefers to receive a royalty and then the publisher assumes the whole risk and ex-Taking into account the manufacture, stereotyping, discounts, rents, salaries, guaranty, etc., an average royalty of ten per cent. is certainly a fair one. Royalties vary, of course, with the kind of book, on school-books, for instance, being less than general literature, the retail price being lower and discount to booksellers

"As to international copyright, there are two bills before Congress, the Chace bill and the Hawley bill. The Hawley bill seems to be on the whole intrinsically the better; but the other bill looks more practicable, as it conciliates the known protection feeling. The Hawley bill is the clearer and easier and the more direct, and it conforms to our copyright statute. The Chace bill conciliates the protection sentiment in favor of the printer, the paper-maker, and the binder, and I suppose it would probably have the better chance in Congress. I think that publishers generally will favor an international copyright

"One effect of an international copyright would be to make books dearer. You should read a little work, the history of the house of Carey and Lea, which shows how thirty or forty years ago there came the same inundation of cheap prints; the best standard books had to be done in 'broadside' edition. Then we gradually grew out of that. But, understand, I do not know that the publisher, so far as putting up the price of books through an international copyright is concerned, will participate in additional profits. He will probably sell fewer books. I think that one of the benefits of the the original intention, as announced in the constitution, of the copyright law, to furnish incentives and inducements to authors. By an international law we hold out inducements not only here but abroad, and production would be stimulated through the offering to authors of greater and more assured rewards. The author and the public would get the benefit of this. There would be more books and more good books, these requiring careful preparation and great labor. authors had their rights more fully assured, there would be more incentive for them to work, and with an international copyright law, they would have two markets instead of one. Mr. Motley's books are dearer than so many volumes of Macaulay; an international copyright would put standard as well as other foreign authors along with American authors."

A. D. F. RANDOLPH.

Anson D. F. Randolph, who has the reputation of being one of the best-informed men in the publishing business, expressed his views as follows:

"The present discussion in England of the relations of authors and publishers is perhaps unfortunate, inasmuch as the general public may be led into a misunderstanding as to the rights and relations of each. As a matter of course, the conclusion will be that, as usual, the literary man is the victim of a misplaced confidence. It will be conceded, I think, that authors as a rule are not to be rated as business men. Mr. Besant has certainly shown this in his lecture. He is clear in his conceptions as to results in sales of 10,000 copies of a work, and figures out the profits on his basis of percentage. As to the results to the publishers, he makes it quite clear that, under all circumstances, the latter gets altogether too much, for in none of his calculations does he allow anything to defray the average cost of selling every book; or for actual losses that attend the publication of four books out of every five or more. He forgets also that successful authors are the exception-not the rule.

"Mr. Besant undertakes to show what the publishers' and authors' profits would be on a certain book, without stating how many pages the volume of which he speaks contains, or how it is bound, or what it cost to set the type, etc., by speaking of a book that is usually sold at 6 shillings, a book containing about the amount of matter of a singlevolume novel. That book, he says, to produce binding and all, would cost about 1 shilling and 6 pence, and the publisher receive for it 4 shillings. If he gave the author a tenth royalty (10 per cent. on the retail price) which is about 7 pence half penny a copy, he had for himself 2 shillings profit on every copy.

"Certainly this is good figuring; but surely Mr. Besant cannot include in the cost, as stated above, that of the plant (the typesetting, authors' corrections, etc.) in the first edition. Nor does he state accurately what the publisher received, for the rule of 13 as 12 would bring down the price obtained by the publisher to say 90 cents. Nor does he allow anything for the actual cost of selling the book, which, I take it, would average 20 per cent. on the sale price. By this I mean the cost to the publisher of conducting his business. If the book cost to manufacture 30 cents, to sell it would cost 18 cents, and the royalty 15 cents. The publisher would then get 27 cents profit, and not $1 as Mr. Besant would give us to understand.

I doubt if he would get as much as 27 cents, for there must have been a charge for the composition international law would be found in fulfilling of the book, a portion of which is usually put upon each edition published; and then if only 1000 copies were sold, the publisher would suffer an actual loss.

"In the discussion of the question in the newspapers, as well as by Mr. Besant, much stress is laid upon the fact that the publisher often makes a manufacturer's profit on the product. And why should he not, even on the half-profit plan-at least on the first edition? Possibly no publisher would think of doing this in the case of an author of reputation, whose works would command an immediate and remunerative sale. But in nineteen cases out of twenty, the publication of a book is an uncertain venture. A publisher is indispensable. Nothing can be done without him, for we have not yet reached the happy state where every author is a Ruskin, and his own publisher. if a publisher must be had, is his imprint, judgment, experience, machinery, to be had for nothing, in the interest of an unknown writer, of whom the public has never heard, and may not-alas, as is most frequently the case-care to hear? Is the name of Murray, or Longmans, or Smith & Elder worth nothing on a title-page? Is not their facility for placing a book to which they have given their indorsement worth something to the unknown author? Shall they superintend the work of production, giving their time and skill to do it aright—and all the time with the feeling that success is doubtful-shall they have no 'secret' profit, and rely solely upon the prospective sales? And if there should be none, pay in service for the privilege of publishing an unsalable book?

As to the English methods of dealing with authors, little, practically, is known here. contracts are made on the half-profit plan; scarcely any in which the author assumes all the cost of manufacture and sale. (Such books are considered as having little, if any, merchantable value.) The American publishers long ago adopted the simple rule, in cases where the manuscript was not bought outright, of paying a royalty or percentage on all copies sold. On this plan, when the author places his manuscript with the publisher, he is not subjected to any of the expenses attending the publication or sale of his book. Should he make the stereotype plates at his own cost (he to hold them as his own property), then his royalty would be 15 per cent., instead of 10, on the retail price. This is the general rule.

" It may be well to take an illustration of authors' and publishers' profits in this country under this rule, bearing in mind the important fact that to the cost of production must be added the cost of selling the book-a fact which in all authors' estimates of profits is never considered. Take a copyright volume of 400 pages, having no illustrations, and not loaded down while in the hands of the printer with "author's corrections" and "time on proofs." To sterotype such a book properly would cost $350; to manufacture properly say 1000 copies, $350; Here is an investment of $700 on the part of the publisher. A sale of three thousand copies of a book is considered a fair sale. The retail price is fixed at $1.50, and on this the author gets 10 per cent., $150. The book will bring to the publisher about 90 cents a copy. Let me sum it up :

Pr. Cost of plates. $350 Sales, 1000 copies at ost of 1000 copies... go cents. ... Two-thirds 350 cost of Cost of selling, 20 per cent. on $700. 180 plates, the $350 be-Author's copyright ... ing distributed over 150 1500 copies...

"And what if the book should reach a sale of only 1000 copies? Who will figure the result? And if it be said that it is not fair to add the cost of selling the book to the cost of production, the inference must be that the publisher is conducting his business as a pleasant pastime, first in the interest of the author and secondly for the 'enlightenment of mankind.'

"It may not be worth while to make comparisons, but my impression is that almost every publisher has found that complaints of unfair dealing or an indifference to the interest of the author, have come not from the successful, but While it does not follow the unsuccessful ones. that the books of the latter were not worthy to receive a just recognition, the uncomfortable fact remains that the books did not sell. Was it the fault of the publisher? Surely, having put his reputation, time, judgment, money in the venture. and knowing that every copy sold would put pennies in his purse, how could he be wholly indifferent as to the sales? Let any one disposed to think that the fault is with him, rather than with the public, examine the publisher's catalogue and get from him the exact figures of sales on the now dead books. Then let him pass on into wareroom and bindery, and look upon the massive piles of unsold volumes that have so long been lying there, waiting for the never-returning 'vanished hand' of the buyer-and the publisher has paid for the making of them all !

"As the relation of the author and the publisher should be one of amity, inasmuch as their interests are identical, I cannot but regret the temper of the present discussion in the Authors' Club and the newspapers. In a somewhat long observation and experience I have seldom known of a serious difficulty arising between an author and a publisher, where there was a due recognition of each other's rights. Would that successful authors like Mr. Besant and some others might render aid and comfort to their unsuccessful brothers in some other way than by raising questions as to the ability and honesty of their publishers."

HENRY HOLT.

Henry Holt, whose opinion was first asked upon the question of relative profits for author and publisher, smiled grimly as he responded: "The fundamental question in the consideration of the financial relations of author and publisher is that of loss-sharing, as there are losses for a great many more books than there are profits. That seems to be a phase of this discussion which has been entirely ignored. From what I see in the newspapers it seems that the statement is going the rounds that French publishers pay authors one-third the retail price of every book that is sold. According to our rates of prices that would be impossible, even if every book succeeded, for one-third the retail price represents about all the gross profit above the mere cost of paper, printing, and binding, to say nothing of the typesetting and the advertising. Now, the fact is that of the books by unknown authors, even when these are selected with the best discretion, not more than one in five does any more than pay bare expenses. A good deal more than one in five fail even to pay expenses. So, manifestly, under any conditions that prevail in this country, the French method, which the newspaper reports seem to indicate that Mr. Besant indorses, is, if it is correctly reported, absolutely impracticable; but I doubt if it is correctly reported, as from ou point of view it seems too absurd.

"Somebody has got to bear the losses and the expenses, and in the case of books where the publishers take the risk, as they have to in the vast majority of cases, if anybody will invent any way of meeting them except by having successful books meet them, I should be very glad indeed for one to put it into practice. Perhaps if all the people who blame publishers for a lack of public spirit for sometimes declining such risks would unite to take them themselves, a method would be discovered.

"It is all nonsense about a publisher's business being an exception to all other businesses in that regard. There are a great many businesses-all those in which taste and fashion play a partwhere many failures have to be paid for by one success. Wall-paper designs, for instance, are much nearer the extreme in this regard than books are, only the designers of wall-paper do not happen to be writers and speakers to call attention to their case, while the authors of books are.

"As to the English 'half profits' system, in England and in Europe generally they are in the habit of going into petty details to an extent which we do not in this country; it is entirely different from the American way of doing things for publishers to go into the 'half profits' system, which would oblige them to keep a mass of accounts of petty details regarding books, the majority of which afford no profits or 'half profits anyhow. The sliding scale system, discussed in The Critic a year or two ago, by which a larger per cent. should be paid on a large sale than for a small one, is reasonable in regard to general literature, but very unreasonable in regard to school-books, where an increased sale generally means an increased proportionate outlay on the publisher's part in pushing.

"As to the charges of unfairness, I wonder if American publishers have as many made against them as English publishers do; I don't seem to hear as many. I think there are very few men prominent in the trade here who would be stupid enough to set their own clerks an example of dishonesty, and they cannot be dishonest without their clerks knowing it.

"As far as the receipts of American authors are concerned, it seems to me that any newspaper must be pretty hard up for a subject that thinks that in the absence of an international copyright law these receipts can be large enough to justify much discussion. Since the old courtesy of the trade broke down, the competition of books which are taken without pay and sold in the cheapest possible forms has driven away the American author's natural chances of a market."

EDWARD S. MEAD.

Edward S. Mead, of Dodd, Mead & Co., expressed his views as follows:

"The trouble with the half-profits account, as it exists in England, is the difficulty that arises in deciding the actual cost of the book, because so many items enter into the account; for instance, the proportion of the expense for carrying on the business, of the advertising, where several books are advertised together, etc. It is ridiculous for the author to say, as has been urged, I believe, that he should have one-third of the retail price. Suppose a book sells at $1.50; take off 40 per cent. to the trade and that leaves the publisher 90 cents; deduct the author's 50 cents and the publisher has only 40 cents for the entire risk and expense of production. Any business arrangements where the terms are not strictly defined are sure to be unsatisfactory to the persons immediately concerned, and the half-profits system is open to that objection because, as I have said, of the difficulty of fixing the expense items, and that cannot be

" As an example of the state of mind of authors generally on the subject of property rights an illustration may be found in a letter which was published in a daily paper in this city not long ago in which some friends of Dana, the author of Two Years Before the Mast,' complained that he had received only $250 for his work, but that since that time the book had had a large sale and his heirs were justly entitled to returns accordingly. Now, that book had been sold outright. Mr. Dana had sold a piece of Broadway property of his-supposing the case-and the purchaser had fortunately made a large sum of money out of it, how would it appear for his heirs or assignees to come forward and say that they were justly entitled to the benefits of it?

"As to our own firm, we publish no books, as a rule, on which we do not assume the risk. the royalty system no question of differences comes up. The author is at liberty to choose his own publisher and as in any other business, he should deal with a house in good standing, one in which he has confidence, and then no difficulty will arise regarding accounts. Here the publisher buys the manuscript outright or gives a royalty, and so the complications of the English system are unknown. The only complaint of which I know comes from those whose books prove to be failures, and, you know, it requires a strong character to take defeat with cheerfulness or even com-

" As to whether an author should sell his manuscript outright or take a royalty, there can be no question that if he can forego immediate payment it is a much more profitable thing for him to take a royalty. Take, for instance, the case of E. P. Roe, probably the most popular American The royalty on his last book, 'He Fell in Love with His Wife,' has already brought him in over $7000 within the first six months, and he has still forty-one years in which he can receive returns from the sales. Under such circumstances Mr. Roe would be foolish to sell his work for a lump sum, unless it should be a large one, which no publisher would undertake the risk to give.

"I do not think there is among what are known as regular publishers one who is not strongly in favor of international copyright. This would certainly improve the quality of the books of the pres-The book of to-day is not going to last ent day. and in the next generation one taking up a book of the present day will find it, like the one-horse shay, suddenly changed into a pile of saw-dust."

It is generally stated among publishers that the opposition to an international copyright comes from the paper manufacturers, whose sales for cheap reprints and literature would be greatly diminished by such a law.

The Tribune reporter interviewed, besides the foregoing, a number of other publishers, who all declare their desire for an international copyright, as a matter of justice to the author and in the interests of good literature as well as good paper to print it on. All these publishers have asserted that within their experience with British publishers they had discovered no indication that their foreign brethren had undertaken to deprive their authors of the amount due them on the profit-sharing plan. And yet it was pointed out by one publisher, who did not wish his name to be mentioned, that there was a plausible basis for the assertions of Mr. Besant as to arranging accounts for the advantage of the publisher. This publisher said:

"The system of long accounts in England certainly does give the British publisher an opportunity to make money at both ends and in that sense to defraud the author of his just profits. Publishers who pay cash get a discount on paper, advertising, binding, and on all the material used in making up a book. Now, suppose an author is to have one-half the profits on a book. The publisher makes out his statement based on the regular prices of material, etc., and the profits resulting thus appear on the books. And this account is made out on the prices as existing on long credit. But if the publisher has paid cash he gets a discount. and this discount does not appear on the books. There is precisely the point where opportunity to mislead or cheat or defraud the author, or whatever you choose to call it, comes in. Of course it may be said that if the publisher is so situated that he can pay cash, he is entitled to the discount he can get and that the author has no right to share in the benefits. But that this condition of affairs exists I have reason to believe is true."

THE CALIFORNIA STATE SERIES OF TEXT-BOOKS.

THE San Francisco correspondent of the American Stationer gives, among others, the following facts of interest to the book-trade:

A bill has passed the Legislature relative to the sale of the State series of text-books. The greater part of these books will be disposed of by book-dealers, whose profit will consist in the difference between the cost of freight or expressage and the additional sum charged by the State Board of Education when the books are sent by mail, the selling price by book-dealers being fixed by the board. In order to purchase books from the State, a retail dealer must first transmit to the Superintendent of Public Instruction an affidavit to the effect that he will not re-sell the books to any person for the purpose of being sold again, or to any person outside of California, and that he will not sell them at a price exceeding that fixed by the State. The price-list has been fixed by the board as follows: First Reader, at Sacramento, 15 cents; by mail or purchased from bookseller, 20 cents. Second Reader, at Sacramento, 30 cents; by mail or purchased from bookseller, 38 cents. Third Reader, at Sacramento, 40 cents; by mail or purchased from bookseller, 52 cents. Speller, at Sacramento, 20 cents; by mail or purchased from bookseller, 26 cents.

"The local school board has adopted the Spencerian system of copy-books for use in schools of the city. Ivison, Blakeman & Co., of New York, are to furnish the books through their agents here, Payot, Upham & Co., who have given a bond of $50,000 to bind the contract. Ivison, Blakeman & Co. agree to furnish both the Spencer and the Spencerian copy-books, large, for 10 cents each as long as they are continued in use. They further agree to furnish copy-books free for the indigent pupils, provided that no more will be required for any one year than has been used for that purpose in the years 1885 and 1886."

COMMUNICATIONS.

A CAUTION TO THE TRADE.

NEW YORK CITY, April 2, 1887.

Editor of Publishers' Weekly:

DEAR SIR: Will you kindly call the attention of your readers to a man styling himself the Rev. Henry Baum, editor of the American Church Review, an Episcopalian periodical?

He gives his address as Post-Office Box 1839, New York, and his residence as New Rochelle. He is going the rounds of the book-stores, purchasing books, for which he subsequently fails to pay as agreed, and the seller can neither get his money nor a return of the books, if he offers that privilege.

He is of medium stature, dresses clerically, is very pleasant and scholarly in his talk, and by plausible demeanor and address has deceived some of the most experienced in the trade.

THEODORE BERENDSOHN.

[We regret to say that we have had similar experiences with the person here named. Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., publishers of the American Church Review, on inquiry, disavow any responsibility for the liabilities incurred by Mr. Baum.—Publ. P. W.]

CO-OPERATION IN PERFECTING THE RECORDS OF AMERICAN BIBLIOGRAPHY.

To the Editor of the Publishers' Weekly:

W. H. LOWDERMILK & Co.
[W. H. Lowd rmilk, J. T. Loomis, H. W. Dowling.]
WASHINGTON, D. C., March 22, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your editorial in the issue of the WEEKLY for the 12th inst., I wish to say that, should some plan be formed and work organized for the purpose of perfecting the records of American publications, I would gladly furnish titles and other particulars of such omissions or errors in existing trade bibliographies as come under notice. In the course of my daily business I frequently find an important book or pamphlet missing from existing records, and have to seek the information concerning it from publisher or author. In this manner much valuable data is acquired which I would gladly communicate should a feasible plan be formed for its preservation.

JOHN T. LOOMIS.

[We print the above letter in grateful recognition of an offer which we hope will be duplicated by other members of the trade.—Ed. P. W.]

NOTES ON AUTHORS.

MRS. ALEXANDER has written a new story, "A Life Interest," and it is to be published serially in London Society.

LORD TENNYSON has written morning and evening hymns for the boys in the Gordon Home, near Portsmouth.

MR. E. P. ROE, who has been spending the winter in Southern California, is writing a new story, the scene of which is laid in that charming country.

In his last letter to Hallam Tennyson, Randolph Caldecott wrote: "I have been making several attempts at the giant and cogitating over the illustrations to 'Jack' generally." This was in reference to "Jack and the Beanstalk" in English hexameters (London: Macmillan & Co.) which Mr. Tennyson has now issued, illustrated with the unfinished sketches of Mr. Caldecott. Although only embryotic, these pictures are very amusing even more so than the text.

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

It is reported that Prince Napoleon will before long bring out a book in reply to M. Taine's recent work on Napoleon I.

BAKER & TAYLOR announce that they have now ready the fiftieth thousand of Rev. Dr. Josiah Strong's "Our Country, its possible future and its present crisis."

Bangs & Co. announce that the regular Spring Parcel Sale will be held Monday, the 9th of May, and following days. Invoices should reach them by the 18th inst. at the latest.

DESHLER WELCH & Co., publishers, New York, announce a novel in press from the pen of Archibald C. Gunter, the well-known dramatist, author of "Prince Karl," "The Deacon's Daughter," "Fresh, the American," "Two Nights in Rome," etc. It is entitled "Mr. Barnes of New York."

A NEW history of "The War of Secession" is to be published in the fall, says The Dial. It is said to be written by Mr. Rossiter Johnson, much of whose matter has appeared in an excellent series of articles in the New York Examiner during the past year. It is understood that the volume will be illustrated.

MRS. JOHN A. LOGAN has written to R. S. Peale & Co., who are to publish the late General Logan's "Volunteer Soldier of America," to dispel all doubts as to the authenticity of the work, that had been fully written before her husband's death, and that he was negotiating with a publisher when so suddenly called from his labors.

La Société des Publications Françaises, Montreal, Canada, has begun to issue a Library of French Fiction to consist of twelve numbers a year at a subscription price of $1.50 per annum. The object of the publishers is to put the most noted works of celebrated authors of fiction within reach of all. Each volume is illustrated and contains an entire work, of undoubted moral worth, which will prove healthy as well as attractive reading. Among the works already published in these cheap quartos are About's "Roi des Montagues;" Halévy's "Abbé Constantin;" Ohnet's "Le Maître des Forges;" Verne's "Un Billet de Loterie," and Daudet's "Tartarin de Tarascon."

"ILLUSTRATED WITH PLATES," says the Critic's Lounger, "is a common enough description of books about art, but a book illustrated with a plate—a blue china plate—is not common. A set of blue plates was issued early in this century with views of New York City as it then was; and one of these, showing the old Park Theatre, has been reproduced in blue, to serve as the frontispiece of the third of the Dunlap Society's publications—the volume of 'Opening Addresses' which Mr. Laurence Hutton has collected and annotated with his usual judgment and taste. Many forgotten poets are revived for a moment as we turn these pages. John Brougham is still remembered; yet he was not a poet. But who remembers Charles Sprague, the banker poet?"

THE CENTURY COMPANY contemplate publishing the complete works of Abraham Lincoln, edited by Nicolay and Hay, whose biography of Lincoln is now running through the Century.

These will fill some three to five octavo volumes, including his speeches, addresses, state papers, his public letters, his private correspondence (a great part of which is up to this time unpublished), his official opinions and memoranda upon some of the most important events of the war, and some very curious and interesting miscellaneous pieces. In connection with his correspondence will be printed many hitherto unpublished letters from prominent persons, which are necessary to a full understanding of Mr. Lincoln's own letters. The works will be accompanied with elaborate notes, historical and explanatory."

A. H. SMYTHE. Columbus, O., announces that he will have ready on the 15th a limited edition of the "Preliminary Report on Petroleum and Inflammable Gas in Ohio," by Professor Edward Orton, State Geologist. The first edition was issued and distributed by the Legislature of Ohio, and no copies were placed on sale. The report answers such questions as these: How were petroleum and gas formed and how accumulated? In what rocks are they contained? Are they forming now? It treats at length of the new horizon of gas and oil in Ohio and Indiana, viz.: the Trenton Limestone. The conditions under which gas and oil are found in this rock, the districts within which they can be looked for with most promise of success, and the reasons for failure or success in particular districts are pointed out. The most practical modes of measuring the flow of gas wells ever published are described in this volume. The report of 1886 is reprinted entire, and to it a supplement is added, containing the more recent facts in the new fields. A map of the gas-producing belts of Ohio as at present developed is added, and also a new map of great interest, showing the topography of the Trenton Limestone in Western Ohio and by implication in Eastern Indiana. The price will be $1 in paper and $1.25 in cloth.

OBITUARY.

EDWARD S. RICHARDS, stationer, of Lyons, N. Y., in business with his brother, W. N. Richards, arrived in Roanoke, Va., on Friday, April 1, intending to begin a business in that city—the Lyons establishment having been sold out to good profit. On Sunday morning Mr. Edward S. Richards declined his brother's invitation to take a walk, announced that he was tired and would take a sleep. His sister-in-law left him at his request and when his brother returned he found the door locked and supposed his brother sleeping. After some hours had elapsed, he grew alarmed, forced the door and found Mr. Richards lying on the floor with his throat cut. The relations cannot account in any way for this suicide.

BUSINESS NOTES.

ELMIRA, N. Y.—Preswick, Morse & Co., booksellers and stationers, have dissolved partnership.

NOTES IN SEASON.

EDWARD MEEKS, Phila., will have ready early in the summer the third edition of John H. Cooper's "Treatise on the Use of Belting for the Transmission of Power." The second edition is already exhausted.

D. APPLETON & Co. will publish next week "Proverbs from Plymouth Pulpit," selected from the writings and sayings of Henry Ward Beecher, revised in part by Mrs. Beecher and under revision by him at the time of his death. They also announce a new edition, in paper covers, "The Poison Problem, or, the cause and curse of intemperance," by Dr. Felix L. Oswald.

LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & Co. announce that they will publish in a few weeks the fourth (and completing) volume of Halkett & Laing's "Dictionary of Anonymous and Pseudonymous Literature of Great Britain" simultaneously with its publication in England. They will be able to supply the work in full sets of 4 volumes after the publication of this volume.

DAVID McKay, Phila., will shortly publish a volume of lyrical verses and vers de société, which is the joint production of two young Philadelphians, whose initials, C. H. L. and S. D. S., Jr., will be recalled by readers of Life, Puck, and other humorous weeklies, and whose more ambitious work has been found acceptable by some of the leading magazines.

TICKNOR & Co. will publish to-day Mr. Whipple's volume on "American Literature and Other Papers," with introduction by John Greenleaf Whittier; the Students' Edition of "Enoch Arden," edited by W. J. Rolfe; "The Confessions of Claud," by Edgar Fawcett; and "Ancient Legends, Mystic Charms, and Superstitions of Ireland," by Lady Wilde ("Speranza"), with a chapter on the Ancient Races of Ireland, by the late Sir William Wilde, fascinating folk-tales delightfully told.

SCRIBNER & WELFORD have just issued a work which has been described as "a most attractive picture of royalty, almost reconciling one to the institution," entitled "Two Royal Lives : gleanings at Berlin and from the lives of the Crown. Prince and Princess of Germany," by Dorothea Roberts. The Germans are proud of "Unser Fritz," and delighted with his charming wife, and justly so if their lives are as noble and pure as is here depicted. They are in gratifying contrast to the social and intellectual weakness of royalty Interesting details are given of the generally. effective German method of bringing up children, and on this topic this volume almost forms a manual for young parents. Sporting men will find a very acceptable volume in a work just issued by Messrs. Scribner & Welford, entitled "Sports and Anecdotes of By-gone Days," by C. T. S. B. Richardson, the well-known author of "Down the Road." It is full of stirring reminiscences of the turf and water, and is illustrated by numerous highly-colored plates.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS have in press a new work by Dr. Marvin R. Vincent which will prove a valuable aid to all readers of the New Testament. Its title is "Word-Studies in the New Testament," and its chief purpose will be to open to the English reader and student the native force of the separate words of the New Testament in their lexical sense, their etymology, their history, their inflexion, and the peculiarities of their usage by different evangelists and apostles. The first book by Mr. Thomas Nelson Page is announced by the Scribners under the title of "In Ole Vir-ginia." It will consist of a number of the author's most clever stories descriptive of life in Virginia, including "Marse Chan," all of which are especially strong in that faithful portraiture of Southern scenes and people which has won for Mr. Page so wide an audience of readers. A handsome cover has been designed for the book by the Tiffany Art Company, of New York. The Scribners have become the publishers of George W. Cable's story of "Dr. Sevier," and a new edition uniform with his other works is now on the press for early The story will also be published at the same time in paper-covered form.

The lives and careers of the two brothers form a strong contrast—the one so throughly good and industrious, the other vicious in every way, obtaining finally through his unscrupulousness and audacity wealth, and a place in good society. The object is to illustrate that knavery often succeeds, where modest merit is very much at a discount. Even the mother of the two brothers loves the evil one best, though he refuses to go to her when she is dving only then is the he refuses to go to her when she is dying; only then is she brought to a consciousness of the life long devotion, and self sacrifice of her good son—through the reprimand of her confessor.

The series obtained so many traders in the Tribuse through the wide tained so many readers in the Tribune, through the wide-spread interest in the subject, that, as now presented in handsome book form, it appeals again strongly to a new circle of readers. & Co., 1887. c. '86 and '87. 11+151 p. il. D.

The substance of this volume originally appeared as serial papers in the August and September numbers for 1886 of the Literary World. A small pamphlet edition of these papers was made and issued by the present publishers. The continued demand for the pamphlet has led to the publication of it in a more permanent form. In this edition much new material, mostly derived from family sources, has been supplied by the author, who is Mf. Emerson's cousin.

He; a companion to "She;" being a history of the adventures of J. Theodosius Aristophano on the Island of Rapa Nui in search of his immortal ancestor. N.Y., Norman L. Munro, [1887.] c. 213 p. il. D. (Munro's lib., no. 721.) pap., 20 c.

The general plan of the story strongly resembles that of "She." The hero is a Greek who goes in search of his immortal ancestor, who is found on an island of the Pacific, and who has already existed for 3000 years when discovered. His powers and his surroundings are all supernatural, while the adventures of the hero quite match those of "She" in marvellousness. The doctrine of transmigration of souls and the theosophical theories are seriously incorporated into the story, thereby explaining many ously incorporated into the story, thereby explaining many inexplicable things.

Carlo Donati, the "knight-errant," after having graduated as a lawyer at Naples, leaves his profession and becomes barytone in a travelling opera company, for the sake of protecting his sister, the wife of the impressario, against the persecution of an unprincipled singer in the troupe. Carlo devotes his life most unselfishly to his sister and her four year-old boy. The troupe visits England and America and the author describes the influences of climate upon certain natures in very clever sentences. Donati's love-story is complicated in many ways. The author as usual has a purpose, which is to prove that an actor's profession is compatible with all the sterling traits actor's profession is compatible with all the sterling traits of character.

Contains both unpublished mss. of Charles Reade, and also fragments of his correspondence, with numerous extracts from his diaries. These have been selected with care from a voluminous mass of literary and personal remains, individually by Mr. C: L. Reade. The narrative portion of the work, indeed its entirety, apart from the matter which emanates from Charles Reade's own pen. has been written by the Rev. Compton Reade. Aside from the light the work throws on the great English writer's own life, it is specially interesting in the estimates it presents from his pen of the great men and women and events of his day.

The author, a lieutenant in the U. S. navy, was one of the officers of the Tacony sent by the United States government in February, 1867, to the waters of Mexico "to protect American interests." The Tacony was moored off the city of Vera Cruz, where she remained from March 28 to July 24, 1867—a most eventful period for the Mexicans. The operations on the coast are described, together with the action of the German, French, and English vessels congregated around Vera Cruz. By the aid of correspondence and conversations with officers who were present, and by scrutiny of various executive documents and departmental files the author has gathered a large amount of interesting history connected with the closing scenes of Maximilian's short reign in Mexico.

MISUNDERSTANDINGS BETWEEN AU-THOR AND PUBLISHER.

THE address of Mr. Besant before the English Society of Authors, and the discussion which it has called out-in which the Tribune interviews with American publishers, reprinted in the Pub-LISHERS' WEEKLY, have been among the most interesting contributions—have emphasized very strongly the need of the clearest possible understanding between an author and his publisher. The history of American publishing has been remarkably free from those dissensions of authors which have come to the surface in England, at not infrequent intervals, from the days of Dr. Samuel Johnson to our own day; yet this happy fact gives the more motive to prevent any possible future misunderstandings with authors. In England the half-profits system so generally in vogue, the special prices to the Mudie and Smith Libraries, the thirteen-for-twelve discount plan, and the nebulous uncertainty as to whether American payments belong to author or publisher, have combined to make the relations between the two classes complex and difficult. Indeed, many of the most serious misunderstandings between American publishers themselves have been a legacy from the uncertainty so prevalent in England as to whether a royalty or honorarium, forwarded on account of American republication of an English book, belonged properly to a publisher who had bought out the author's rights, or were a payment outside the rights transferred by the author and therefore an additional remuneration to which he alone held title. It would be a great boon to American publishers if English authors and publishers could come to a definite conclusion on this one point.

The system of half-profits, which is rarely used on this side of the water, has in it peculiar dangers of misconception. The most honest publisher finds it next to impossible to reckon exactly the cost of any one book, which not only shares such general expenses as rent, clerk hire, catalogues, and a hundred other items, but is advertised or otherwise specially pushed now by itself, now in company with a handful of other books, now as a part of his general list. If he is himself a manufacturer, and a wise one, the cost reported to him by his departments should cover a certain manufacturing profit, to make his departments business-like in their methods, and in proper competition with outside printers and binders; or if he gets a discount for cash in his purchases of stock, he makes a specific profit as his own banker. Theseare necessary elements of the "secret profit" complained of by the English author. The falsification of accounts for the sake of lessening an author's profit is, to put it plainly, a crime which we hesitate to believe any respectable business man would commit. The only safety is that inany half-profits scheme every possible item. should be covered either specifically or by general provision.

The royalty system, in some shape or other, is a vast improvement upon this other system, because it leaves fewer loopholes for misunder-standing; but here also contracts with authors should be absolutely clear. Of this special topic we shall speak further in another issue.

THE "Chatterbox" case — Estes & Lauriat: et al. vs. The Worthington Co. — was on the calendar of the U. S. Circuit Court to come up for trial on the 14th inst. At the time of our going to press no decision was reached and we must therefore defer a report on the matter until our next issue.

THE article on "Literary Property and International Copyright," delivered as a lecture by Mr. G. H. Putnam at the Columbia College School of Library Economy, on the 2d inst., is in type, but has to be crowded out of this issue. We shall print the first instalment in our next issue.

New MATERIAL FOR PAPER-MAKERS.—A new use for the tobacco plant has been discovered. Its stems and waste, it is claimed, are equal to linen rags in the manufacture of paper. Tobacco waste costs less than $10 a ton, linen rags $70 to. $80. There is no expense in assorting the former and very little shrinkage, as against a loss of one-third of rags. The yearly tobacco waste is exitated by the census reports at from 3,000,000 to 4,000,000 pounds.

AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS. GEORGE HAVEN PUTNAM'S VIEWS.

From the N. Y. Tribune, April 10.

In continuation of the views of American publishers regarding the relations of authors and publishers in this country, we reprint the following interview with Mr. George Haven Putnam from the Tribune of April 10, being a sequence to articles reprinted from the same source in the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY of April 2 and 9, regarding the relations of authors and publishers and the equitable distribution of the profits of making books:

" Is the profit-sharing system, as known in England, in use between American publishers and

"As far as I can judge from the practice of my own house and from that of the firms with whose methods I am most familiar, I should say that it is decidedly the exception for an American book to be published under a system of 'division The principal objections to such a of profits. system are that it necessitates no little additional clerical labor in the keeping and in the rendering of accounts, and that it entails more risk of misunderstandings with the author than is incurred under any other publishing method.

"Under a profit-sharing system, the author, who has, as a rule, no familiarity with the details and requirements of book-manufacturing, has submitted to him, from half-year to half-year, statements showing what it has cost to print first and subsequent editions of his book, and setting forth the other expenses of putting it upon the market. He either, in the strength of his faith in the statements of his publisher, accepts as correct the figures submitted, or he possibly attempts to verify them by securing quotations from other printers or binders. In the latter case, he may easily mislead himself and do injustice to his publishers, by having quoted to him figures which really stand for different and an inferior class of work-work with which his publishers would not have been willing to associate their imprint, and with which he himself would not have been satis-There are a great many ways in which a book can be printed, and it is of course all-essential that any figures which are compared shall certainly refer to exactly the same thing. If an author decides to have his book published on the half-profit system, it will usually be wiser for him to have figures of cost submitted to him in advance, in the same manner as if he expected to assume the entire outlay, and he will then know what he has to expect.

"The author may also find difficulty in understanding why it has been necessary to sell the larger portions of his editions at special rates to the distributing houses, having started with the assumption (from which even so old an author as Mr. Besant has not freed himself) that the publisher always received for his books not less than two-thirds of the retail price. In fact, I have had to do with intelligent authors who based their own preliminary calculations of profits on the assumption that the publishers always received for books sold the full retail price.

"The cost of rebinding volumes which have been sent out to the dealers and have been returned unsold and damaged, and various similar items which come up in the necessary work of selling (or of trying to sell) a book, are also puzzling, and altogether there are so many details in connection with which explanations are called for,

that the publisher may easily, under such an arrangement, for books which do not make a brilliant success, expend in valuable time much more than his share of the possible 'profits.' It is doubtless for considerations of this kind that American publishers have, in the majority of cases, arranged to pay their authors by royalties, or to compound such royalties by the purchase outright of the copyright.'

" Is there any complaint, so far as you know, among American authors that their royalties are

"The question is occasionally raised whether the profits from these sales of any particular work do not permit a larger rate of royalty than the customary 10 per cent. of the retail price. I were an author, I should be inclined to take the ground that this rate, which doubtless represents an average between what is just practicable on the less successful and what is fully earned by the more successful books, sometimes works injustice to the authors whose works sell well, for the benefit of authors the sale of whose works is inconsiderable, although, curiously enough, it is from the latter class that such complaints as arise The principal outlays in are most frequent. getting a book upon the market are made in connection with the first 5000 or the first 1000 copies. When a book has passed the point of say 5000 copies, and is still in steady demand, the profits on the sale of subsequent thousands are larger, and on these latter a somewhat higher rate may properly be paid. An author whose books are of such a character as to secure (without the necessity of issuing them in paper-form at a mere manufacturing profit) a continued sale extending over 10,000 copies, is usually in a position to arrange for a higher than the normal rate of royalty.

"If, however, the work is fiction, and it is considered desirable, for the sake of competing with the cheap reprints of foreign works, to issue it in paper-form, the margin of profit becomes, as a rule, too inconsiderable to permit paying the author anything more than 10 per cent., and on such volumes there often remains for the publisher, after the copyright is paid, considerably less than 10 per cent.

"This rate of 10 per cent. of the retail price has been arrived at as a fair average royalty, on the calculation that it represented about one-half the net profits remaining after the cost of printing, advertising, and putting the book upon the market had been covered. As a fact, however, the 10 per cent. represents less than half the net profits of a volume securing a large sale, while it represents more, and sometimes much more, than half the profits on a volume the sale of which is inconsiderable. If the royalty is paid on all copies sold, and the sale is less than 1000 copies, or for a low-priced book or an illustrated book, less than 2000 or 2500, there is a loss instead of a profit—a loss which is, of course, increased by the amount of royalty paid to the author. therefore, more than 10 per cent. should be credited on the sales of successful works (and there are cases in which such higher rate is certainly equitable), less than to per cent. ought to be credited on the books which just pay for themselves, or which produce a deficiency. For the deficiency-producing books the authors are prop erly entitled to no compensation from the publishers. Payment for work cannot be made in proportion to the labor it has cost, but in proportion to the extent of the public demand for it. A first book, therefore, which must usually be an experiment, ought not to receive copyright until enough copies (usually 1000) have been sold to return the first cost. When a profit has been secured, it would then be in order to pay royalty also on the first 1000.

"It is also the case that 10 per cent. of the retail price represents, under American methods of trade, a larger proportion of the net price received by the publisher than is the case with an English work. The great extent of the territory which has to be reached in order to bring a book before the American public causes the outlays for travelling salesmen, for freight, etc., to be much heavier than in England, and results also in the distribution of much larger portions of the editions through jobbing houses. These latter purchase their large supplies of many current books at The from 55 to 50 per cent. of the retail prices. discounts given to jobbing houses have in late years steadily increased, and during the season of 1886, for a larger proportion of their sales than ever before, the publishers received the lower net prices named. For books so sold the author's royalty, therefore, is 20 per cent. of the wholesale price, and is often more than half the net profit."

"Do you know of complaints among American authors to the effect that their publishers' accounts of sale are not trustworthy?"

" I have never myself met with such complaints, and have rarely heard of the existence of any. One evidence that American authors are as a rule satisfied with their publishers is the fact that it is the exception when all the works of one author, or at least all his works of the same character, are not to be found on the catalogue of one house. The same publishers who have issued the first book of an author, have confided to them, with few exceptions, his succeeding works. In England, on the other hand, the books of even the best authors are scattered among the lists of the different publishers, and their are instances of an author's employing as many publishers as he has The disadvantages and loss of sales through such distribution of an author's works are so considerable that it is evident the Englsh authors, whether rightly or wrongly, must frequently believe they have cause for dissatisfaction.

"Is it the practice of your house to give to the authors whose books you publish opportunities of examining the records of the editions of their books?'

"The accounts of sales rendered by my firm specify in detail how many copies have been printed of each volume, and what has been done with these copies. The copyright records at the desk of the copyright clerk, and the printing and binding records at the desk of the stock clerk, are always open to the inspection of authors, and give all the data required for the verification of the accounts of sales."

"What would be the effect of international copyright on the relations between publisher and author, on the number of good books produced and on the prices?"

"This question has already been fully considered in connection with the various discussions of international copyright measures. It is of course certain that when authors can control for their material the markets on both sides of the Atlantic, they will be able to secure larger returns, whether these come to them in the shape of fixed payments or of royalties on increased sales. The publishers, on their part, will be in a position to pay these larger sums to authors, and basing their calculations on larger sales, will also be able to give to the public decently printed books at the lowest possible prices. All parties at interest, except a small group of 'reprinters,' who now get a living out of 'appropriated' literature, will, therefore, be benefited by an international copyright."

RUSKIN'S MODE OF PUBLISHING.

The Pall Mall Gasette prints the following interview with Mr. George Allen, Mr. Ruskin's publisher, as to the method of sale adopted by that author:

"I could even sell my books," said Mr. Ruskin ten years ago in 'Fors,' for not inconsiderable sums of money if I chose to bribe the reviewers, pay half of all I get to the booksellers, stick bills on the lamp-posts and say nothing but what would please the Bishop of Peterborough. I could say a great deal that would please him, and yet be very good and useful; I should like much again to be on terms with my old publisher, and hear him telling me nice stories over our walnuts, this Christmas, after dividing his year's spoil with me in Christmas charity." Remembering this passage and others of about the same date, in which Mr. Ruskin spoke, at the outset of his campaign against the publishing and bookselling trades, of the sacrifices it entailed on him, I asked Mr. Allen how the fortune of war had gone since then. "It has been a winning game," said Mr. Allen, "and a gradually expanding business. It began sixteen years ago with Mr. Ruskin employing me to sell Fors Clavigera.' His original battle was against the bookselling trade only. Messrs. Smith and Elder printed 'Fors' at first and I sold them. Mr. Ruskin objected to the principle of discounts and abatements adopted by the booksellers, and I was to sell 'Fors' at a fixed price to all comers. Then came the 'Revised series' of his already completed works ('Sesame and Lilies,' etc.); these originally bore the double imprint of Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. and myself. They were sold -in purple calf bindings only—in both cases on the same terms as 'Fors.' After 1873 Mr. Ruskin's connection with his old publishers ceased, and he gradually threw all his publishing on me. Since then I have undertaken publishing for Mr. Collingwood and other authors beside Mr. Ruskin. I am an engraver, and had no special knowledge of the publishing trade whatever. But the business has grown and grown ever since."
"Till it has reached—what?" "Well, Mr.

"Till it has reached—what?" "Well, Mr. Ruskin has instructed me to tell you everything you care to ask; so I shall break no confidence if I show you these accounts. For instance, from the new edition of the 'Stones of Venice' Mr. Ruskin has received already £1583 clear profits, besides leaving 1272 copies paid for." "Is that his greatest success?" "I cannot say yet, for the edition was only published last year. So far I think the 'Seven Lamps of Architecture' has done best. The author's clear profits from the editions I have published of that book have amounted to close upon £2500. But without going into further details I may tell you that last year (1886) I was able to pay over to Mr. Ruskin, as his profit, £4000 (about $20,000). And to that you should add the fact that during the year we greatly increased the value of his stock—as, for instance, by the new edition of 'The Stones of Venice.' We have paid all the cost of production, and the profits on it will come steadily in." It will be seen that Mr. Ruskin's royalties, if one puts his profits that way, are extraordinarily large. Thus, 2000 copies of the "Seven Lamps" at £1 Is. brought him a clear profit of £991, equivalent to a royalty of 10s. a copy. And this, so far as I examined, was about the average rate. Thus, to take a cheaper book, I noticed that 3000 copies of "Sesame and Lilies" at 5s. brought him in £345.

"And what, if I may ask, is your own arrangement as publisher with Mr. Ruskin?" "I publish for him simply on commission. The accounts are all kept on his behalf; he takes all the risks and all the profit on his own publications, paying me a commission as one of his outgoings. Originally, as stated in 'Fors,' he proposed to share the net profits of that work with me. But I do not think that arrangement is fair to the author when his reputation is already assured, and he accordingly pays me a commission of so much on each copy sold—the amount of commission varying with the price of the book and with the kind and amount of trouble involved."

"You have given me some figures of the profits on various books; can you give me any of sales, to show their comparative popularity?"

Mr. Allen readily complied with my request, and drew up the following table, showing the sales during 1886 of some of the more popular of Mr.

Ruskin books:

Sesame and Lilies (small edition)	2,123
Frondes Agrestes	1,273
Stones of Venice (large edition)	939
Unto this Last	874
Ethics of the Dust	808
Fors Clavigera (volumes of)	730
Seven Lamps of Architecture	668
Modern Painters, Vol. II. (small edition)	652 Stones of Venice (small travellers' edition, in two volumes) each	675
On the Old Road	597 388
King of the Golden River	388

Of the books issuing in parts, the following figures will be interesting:

	Parts.
Præterita (twenty parts issued)	63,386
The Art of England (seven parts issued)	1,929
Roadside Songs of Tuscany (ten parts issued)
Proserpina	921

The "King of the Golden River," it may be interesting to add, is largely bought by the London School Board for prizes. Mr. Ruskin's "Letter to Young Girls" has also a large sale, 264 packets (containing 3168 copies in all) having been sold during the last year.

From the sales the conversation turned to the

"Where," I asked, "do your customers come from?" "From all parts of the kingdom, but more from Scotland and the north than from the south, excepting London. It is a curious fact, too, that I send very much fewer books to Oxford than to Cambridge; a prophet is of no honor, I suppose, in his own university. The circulating libraries do not patronize us at all, with the exception of Mudie's which takes perhaps fifty of each of the smaller works in the course of the year. Lately the orders from the Continent and the colonies (especially Australia) have very much increased." "America, I suppose, lives on its pirated editions?" "Yes, and tries to export them sometimes. I remember we were lately asked as a special favor to pass through a set of American editions for a celebrated traveller.

The matter was referred to Mr. Ruskin, who replied that 'Mr. — had much better not burden himself with stolen property on his missionary expedition. He shall certainly not do so with permission of mine.'"

The above figures are enough to show that Mr. Ruskin has not suffered in the long run by his daring experiment. What makes the result the more remarkable is that the business has been carried in the face of a drastic boycott. First the booksellers boycotted "Ruskins." The attitude of the trade toward the abolition of discount may be judged from the following letter which the sedate firm of Parker & Co. at Oxford addressed to Mr. Allen:

We have received the second volume of Mr. Ruskin's works in due course, but must decline any more on the same terms, and we shall not only not have his books on our table, but we shall decline to give any information how they are to be obtained. The arrangement is not only unsatisfactory, but absurd to the highest degree.

Mr. Ruskin's reply to this boycott was as follows:

The injury done me by the non-exposition of my books on your table will, of course, be grave; but I am already accustomed to a modest way of life and must contract my expenses accordingly. Of the degree of incivility with which, under any given circumstances, it is advisable to treat your customers, you alone can judge; but, respecting the absurdity or rationality of the mode of sale I adopt, there must, I conceive, be two opinions. In the present state of the bookselling trade it cannot but appear absurd that a book, of which the stated price is 9s. 6d. should not be sold for 7s. 6d. But you will find that, at least respecting all books of mine, this economical paradox will continue to exist.

In justice to this firm it should be stated that now they sell more of Mr. Ruskin's publications than any other firm in Oxford. But boycotting is not to be put down by sarcastic letters. Most booksellers followed Messrs. Parkers' lead; others, while reluctantly executing orders, protested unceasingly against what one of them called "the unjustifiable mode Ruskin has adopted in the sale of his books. It may be profitable to you (as we hope it is), but to the general trade it is nothing but a swindle." The swindle—which consisted in maintaining a fixed price and leaving the retail trade to charge its commission openly—went on for years; and when Mr. Allen chanced to be a buyer at an auction, and gave in his name, the trade greeted him with a hearty hiss.

In 1882, however, Mr. Ruskin somewhat relaxed his rule. He had been besieged on all sides, and proposed to write a circular explaining and justifying his system for public distribution. Mr. Allen advised him to spare himself the trouble; the booksellers would never distribute the circular, and the public would never see it. The circular was abandoned for a compromise: the booksellers were henceforth allowed a discount of 10 or 15 per cent. The increasing demand on the part of the public and competition in the trade have caused many booksellers to accept the terms, and the larger part of Mr. Ruskin's business is now done through the shops. Of "Præterita," for instance, three-fourths of the copies go to the booksellers. The effect of the compromise on the sales has been considerable. as may be judged from the following typical figures:

Market and the contract of the	1001.	1003
Sesame and Lilies (large edition)	282	391
Crown of Wild Olive		160
Seven Lamps	ors.	627

In conclusion I asked Mr. Allen how he accounted for the success which he had attained without advertisement, without previous experience and against boycotting. The explanation he said, was simple. In the long run a good article is sure to fetch a good price. Mr. Ruskin is a good writer and the public has found out the fact. "As for my part," continued Mr. Allen, "I have simply had to see that the 'get up' was correspondingly good. Our books are not cheap, but then neither are they nasty. Paper, printing binding are all of the best. As for the engraving, I spare no pains to do justice to the work. For instance, in any case where a great many impressions are wanted. I always touch up the plate so that the later copies may not be inferior to the earlier ones. That is the only secret of my publishing trade that I have to give you: supply the public with a thoroughly good article, and they will find it out, and pay for it."

NARROW MARGINS.

From the American Bookmaker,

Every reader in these days cannot fail to see that the margins of the books which he buys are too narrow. If we could think of the works as having the whole blank space which is seen when the sheet is first printed this would not be so bad, but such is not the case. The bookbinder takes off a generous shaving, and the larger it is the more is his profit. He is obliged to take off a little, even from works which have originally in twelvemo a margin of no more than three-eighths of an inch or in octavo no more than half an inch. Popular taste demands cut and not uncut books, the latter being rarely found, except in works not expected to have much of a sale. The publisher and printer are at fault. While paper is so cheap there is no excuse for this scantiness of dress The whole of the paper in an ordinary duodecimo. is only worth seven or eight cents, and in an ordinary octavo ten or twelve, and the increased margin would add no more than a cent to its cost. Publishers become greedy'; they desire to put a double-column royal octavo page on a 24x38 sheet, and consequently everything looks pinched, or they try to put an ordinary octavo on paper two or three inches smaller each way than the size just mentioned. There are more difficulties in the presswork of these large forms on small sheets than on others, and when the bookbinder has put in his work the signature looks like a full-grown man trying to put on the clothes of a hobbledehoy. The correct rule has long been laid down: the white paper should cover double the size of the printed page; more than this is unnecessary; less than this is skimping; consequently the appropriate size of an octavo page on a sheet of 24x38 is twenty-eight square inches, or four inches by The leaf is six by nine and a half. therefore, gives a margin at the sides of two inches, and at the top and bottom of two and a half; some would alter these proportions slightly by making the page a couple of lines longer, and an em or so narrower, but the margin would be the same, taken altogether. The page of type is a little higher up than the centre of the leaf and a little nearer to the inner side. allows for cutting and gives the proper appearance to the printed matter.

THE ANNUAL AMERICAN CATALOGUE.

From the Nation.

THE two issues of the "American Catalogue" are, it is well known, to be continued at fiveyearly intervals from 1884. Meantime the book-trade has naturally desired something more convenient than the bound volumes of the PUBLISH-ERS' WEEKLY, or than the collection of catalogues known as the "Publishers' Trade List Annual." An experiment has therefore been made which is interesting, first of all, on the mechanical side. The scheme of "The Annual American Catalogue, 1886," involved an alphabetical arrangement by authors of all the book entries in the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY during the year in question, with full titles and descriptive notes (sometimes extracts, from critical notices). To reset these would have cost more than could be recovered by sales, and the ingenious device was resorted to of deftly pasting the entries together in their new order, in double columns corresponding to a page of the WEEKLY, and obtaining a plate from these by means of photography. We should add that a further economy was attained by printing direct from the hardened gelatine plate, thus dispensing with metal. The result is of course inferior to the ordinary presswork, but much less so than might have been expected; and while continuous reading would not be agreeable to the eye, for reference the print is distinct enough. So much forthe first half of the Catalogue. Mr. Bowker was not content to stop there, but has added an index by author, title, and subject, thus meeting every want of the bookseller. This portion had to be set anew. The publishers themselves contribute lists of their issues for 1886. Whether the "American Annual Caatlogue" for 1887 will ever appear depends on the reception given to this forerunner. The trade can hardly be so indifferent to its own advantage, or to the disinterestedness of the compilers and publishers, as to make this first volume unremunerative.

A PROFIT-SHARING EXPERIMENT.

MR. JOHN WANAMAKER announced on the 8th inst., the twenty-sixth anniversary of his business, that all of his subordinates would henceforth enjoy a certain share in the profits of his great bazaar. The division is to be regulated by considerations of length of service and quickness of sales. At least $100,000 are to be annually distributed among salesmen, clerks, and cashboys. The issue of this experiment will be looked forward to with great interest, as one whose bearing on the history of co-operation will be of decided importance.

JOURNALISTIC NOTES.

THE Epoch of April 15 will contain a new story by Julian Hawthorne, entitled "An Ill Wind," complete in one number.

READERS of the Carlyle letters and memoirs will be glad to hear that Wide Awake for May will contain a full-length portrait of Mrs. Carlyle and her pet dog Nero, the same being made from a photograph in the possession of Mrs. Alexander Carlyle.

A NEW magazine, devoted to politics, literature, science, and art, is to be brought out in Washington under the editorship of Mr. John Addison Porter. It will be thoroughly non-partisan and will represent in spirit and in authorship the clever young men of the country. It is proposed to call it The Young Men's National Review.

The American Magazine (which succeeds the Brooklyn Magazine) makes a handsome showing in its first number, dated May, 1887. The reading-matter and illustrations are excellent, and give evidence that the managers of the magazine are determined to stand in the front rank of journalism.

THE May Century will contain two articles on the Pharaohs, containing thirty illustrations, many of them from photographs by Mr. Edward L. Wilson, who will be remembered as the author of "A Photographer's Visit to Petra." Gen. Rosecrans and Gen. Fullerton will contribute articles on military operations about Chattanooga; Prof. W. O. Atwater, of Wesleyan University, will begin a series of illustrated articles on "The Chemistry and Economy of Food;" and Col. John Hay will furnish a poem entitled "Israel," which will have three illustrations by Kenyon Cox.

THE Popular Science Monthly for May will have an interesting description of the curious marriage customs and wedding incidents of the Transylvanian Saxons; a review, by Prof. Edmund J. James, of the recent progress of the movement for substituting the more live and practical studies of nature and modern literature for compulsory Greek in our college and university courses; and Mr. John Burroughs will contribute an article on "The Natural versus the Supernatural," vindicating the position taken in his article in the December number on "Science and Theology."

BUSINESS NOTES.

CLEVELAND, O.—The Burrows Bros. Co., as most of the travellers are aware, are making some very extensive changes in their block, which will give them one of the largest, best adapted to their wants, and most elegant book and stationery stands in the entire country.

PETERSBURG, VA.—The firm of Beckwith & Parham was dissolved by mutual consent. T. S. Beckwith retires in order to devote his whole time and attention to his business in Petersburg. B. M. Parham assumes the payment of all liabilities and obligations of the firm, and will collect all claims and accounts due them, and will continue the business at the same place under the firm-name of Parham & Co. Mr. A. S. Peticolas has an interest in the new firm, and will be glad to see and serve his friends and all others who will favor him with their orders.

NOTES ON CATALOGUES.

CATALOGUES OF SECOND-HAND BOOKS.—C. N. Caspar, 437 E Water St., Milwaukee, Wis., has published a useful catalogue (No. 26) of educational books, including works on music, musical instruments, handbooks and guides, etc. (64 p. nar. 12°).—A. LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

HUBBARD BROS., Phila., will publish in June the "Life of H. W. Beecher," by Joseph Howard, Jr., announced by us a short time ago.

THE proceeds of the author's reading at the Boston Museum on March 31, in aid of the Long-fellow memorial, are given at $5208.

MR. ARTHUR E. WELSH, former representative on the road of Cassell & Co., withdrew on March I, and will soon begin the publishing business on his own account.

R. C. HARTRANFT, Phila., has ready a handbook on "Dogs; how to teach them many curious tricks," which gives quite a review of the methods of the most noted dog-trainers.

THE second volume of the Rev. Edward Everett Hale's life of Franklin will probably not be issued before October, as the work of collecting additional material by specialists and correspondents in Europe is necessarily slow.

The base-ball team attached to the house of Charles Scribner's Sons have reorganized for the season, and will play several games with the nines of other houses during May and June. The Scribners' team has for its manager Mr. Edward Bok.

D. VAN NOSTRAND has in press "Organic Analysis," a manual of the descriptive and analytical chemistry of certain carbon compounds in common use, by Albert B. Prescott, Director of the Chemical Laboratory in the University of Michigan.

WILBUR B. KETCHAM, 71 Bible House, N. Y., announces "A Romance of Providence, being the history of the Church of the Strangers," of which the Rev. Dr. Deems is pastor. It will not be a church manual, but a volume of general interest to the reading public.

By an arrangement with Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls, the American Publishing Company, Hartford, Conn., will have the exclusive control of the sales of "The Life of Henry Ward Beecher," by Lyman Abbott, D.D., and Rev. S. B. Halliday. The book will not be sold to the trade.

The Critic is authority for the statement that Mrs. Beecher and her son-in-law are writing a biography of the late Henry Ward Beecher, which Chas. L. Webster & Co. will publish. All the material Mr. Beecher had prepared for his Autobiography will be used by them, and there is a good deal of it.

A SERIOUS fire broke out in the afternoon of the 6th inst., at 96 Milk Street, Boston, which spread to the Post-Office Square and did considerable damage. The Wright & Potter Printing Company, and O. J. Rand & Co., bookbinders, lost nearly all their plant and most of the work under way, inflicting serious losses on Ticknor & Co., C. C. Soule, Cupples, Upham & Co., Rand & Avery, and others.

We are asked to announce that the employees of the firm of Funk & Wagnalls, have organized themselves into a base-ball club, and are open to all challenges from booksellers, publishing-houses, and paper-trade nines. They also wish to state that they will be pleased to organize a league with the same, for the base-ball season of 1887. All communications should be addressed to F. R. Boocock, 18 & 20 Astor Place, N. Y.

Dissatistikh with the progress made by the publishers of her "History of Woman Suffrage."

Miss Susan B. Anthony has purchased back her right in the work and will become her own publisher. It will be remembered that two volumes of Miss Anthony's works are already published, and she expects to have the third volume ready before a month's time. This volume will contain the steel portraits of twenty-three women who have associated themselves with the question of woman suffrage, the last of which is that of George Sand. Miss Anthony will hereafter publish her book from her home at Rochester, N. Y.

The firm of White, Stokes & Allen, which, though still known as one of the "younger" houses, has won so enviable a reputation during its seven years' existence for the presentation of attractive novelties and other clever publishing work, that the trade will regret to note that this imprint will not continue after this month. The dissolution of the firm, we are informed, is entirely a friendly matter, and the several partners intend to continue or to resume later individual relations with the trade. The existing business will be looked after by Mr. F. A. Stokes, and Mr. J. Parker White, after taking some time possibly to recover from recent illness, will probably start a new publishing-house.

D. C. HEATH & Co. have begun the publication of a Novelletten Bibliothek, a collection of standard short stories in German, selected from the best modern writers, with explanatory and literary notes by Dr. Wilhelm Bernhardt, of the Washington High School, Washington, D. C. It is the aim of the author to present to teachers and students a selection of such short German stories as will combine with a beautiful diction a rich and classic phraseology and a true picture of German life. The following stories are given in the first vol-ume: "Am heiligen Abend" (On Christmas Eve), by Helene Stoll; "Mein erster Patient" (My First Patient), by Marc. Boyen; "Der Wilddieb" (The Poacher), by E. Werner; "Ein Fruehlingstraum" (A Spring Revery), by E. Funder; "Die schwarze Dame" (The Lady in Black), by A. E. Wiesner.

THOMAS WHITTAKER publishes this week "Woodland Tales," by the author of the "Buchholz Family," a series of very charming short stories in which the brilliant Dr. Stinde is presented in an entirely new light; "Sermons for Children," by the noted Samuel Cox, D.D., late editor of The Expositor; "Echoes of Bible History," by Dr. Walsh, Bishop of Ossary, a popular summary of the Eastern discoveries of our age in their relation to the Bible; and a volume of sermons by the Rector of Trinity, New Orleans, Dr. Randolph H. McKim, entitled "Bread in the Desert, and other Sermons." Mr. Whittaker will issue within a fortnight a book by the Bishop of Alabama, Richard Hooker Wilmer, entitled "Remmiscences of a Grandfather, or, the recent past viewed from a Southern standpoint." It will be dedicated to the Hon. Jefferson Davis and no doubt will be of interest to a number of people.

PALLISER, PALLISER & Co., 24 E. 42d St., N. Y., have just issued another one of their convenient Specification Blanks—for frame or brick buildings costing $500 to $4500. These blanks are the work of thoroughly experienced architects, complete in every item, and amply provided with blank spaces for entering additional matter to suit peculiarities of individuals intending building. The firm has in preparation a work to be entitled "Palliser's New Cottage Homes." work is to contain one hundred and sixty new and original designs for cottages and villas, including every description of modern dwelling for the seaside, the south, winter and summer resorts, etc., double houses, country houses, farm-houses and city suburban, village and town residences of every kind and variety, in every conceivable combination of stone, brick, timber, plaster and frame, costing from $75 to $7500, giving all the comforts and conveniences, and suited to every taste, location, want, etc., also fifty new designs for city brick block houses. It will be illustrated by plans, elevations and perspective views from practical working drawings to a uniform scale. The work will make a handsome volume of 11x14 inches, printed on heavy cream plate paper, bound in half leather at $4.

A COLLECTION of Paul Heyse's stories, translated by John Philips, is announced as shortly to be published by Mr. Elliot Stock.

Under the title of "The Western Avernus," Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. are about to publish a record of travel in which America, generally beheld de haut en bas, is viewed from below.

Mr. SWINBURNE, following the example of Mr. Browning, is about to issue a volume of selections from his poems. It will be published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus.

Mr. Ruskin has in the press a new and cheaper edition of the Inaugural Lectures on Art which he delivered in Oxford in 1870, on his first acceptance of the Slade Professorship. The book, which has hitherto been published by the Clarendon Press, will now be issued, uniform with Mr. Ruskin's other smaller works, by Mr. George Allen.

BARON TAUCHNITZ has published a collection of letters he has received from famous authors. Among them is a characteristic note from Thackeray, in 1856: "Your letter of the 26th March has only just found me on my return from America, where I made a prosperous voyage, though I have not quite reached the sum of $500,000, which the Allgemeine Zeitung states to be the present amount of my savings. Don't be afraid of your English; a letter containing £ is always in a pretty style."

THE trade of the "fining copyrighter," who has been in the habit of blackmailing unwary amateurs for singing or playing pieces of music, will be considerably checked, says the London Literary World, if a bill now before Parliament becomes law. Hitherto the copyright-owner could pretty safely reckon on forty shillings and costs, and usually was content to let his victim off without the costs if he paid without legal proceedings; but when the damages and costs are left entirely at the judge's discretion, as is now proposed, his success will be more problematical.

THE Pall Mall Gazette reprints the following parody as applicable to the present discussion between authors and publishers. The lines are addressed, no doubt, by the Society of Authors to a literary débutante:

Where are you going to, my pretty maid?
"I'm going to publish, sir," she said.
Perhaps you've a fortune, my pretty maid?
"My verse is my fortune, sir," she said.
Then you'd better not try it, my pretty maid;
There's an item for "printing;" and, when it is paid,
There's "Commission on sales," oh innocent maid!
In your rural retreat have you heard of THE TRADS
Oh, where are you going to, my pretty maid!

PUBLISH TO-DAY.

DR. SEVIER.

By GEORGE W. CABLE. A New and Cheaper Edition, uniform with "Old Creole Days," and "The Grandissimes." I vol., 12mo, $1.25; also in paper, 50 cents.

"Dr. Sevier deepens and broadens and lightens, with an indescribable charm over its deep study of human nature."-The Critic.

"In Mr. Cable we recognize the 'innocence of eye' which marks the true limner; the fineness of ear which catches every whisper of the forest and every intonation of the human voice; and with these the fire of real genius, which fuses all the thoughts of the artist into one living entity."-Boston Advertiser.

THE ESSENTIALS OF PERSPECTIVE.

With numerous illustrations drawn by the author. By L. W. MILLER, Principal of the School of Industrial Art of the Pennsylvania Museum. I vol., oblong 8vo, $1.50.

This book is such a manual as has long been desired for the guidance of art students and for self-instruction. The point of view throughout is that of the artist rather than the mere scientific theorist. The instructions are clearly set forth, free from all unessential or merely theoretical discussion, and the principles are vividly enforced by a large number of attractive drawings by the author, which illustrate every phase of his teachings.

THE BUCHHOLZ FAMILY.

Sketches of Berlin Life. Second Part. By JULIUS STINDE. Translated from the German. I vol.. 12mo, $1.25.

The second part of this already famous book is now introduced to American readers; and its pictures of social life in Berlin will be found as entertaining and amusing as those which have made the first part so popular.

"We cannot recall another work, fictitious or other, in which the middle class is viewed from the inside. The author does not, as an outsider, satirize the class he describes; he merely laughs at such follies or absurdities of individual members of it as, in life, their friends would see and smile over."—The Nation.

"Herr Stinde's fun is of the quiet, pleasant kind, and never coarse, and he is the best representative of true German humor we have yet seen."-N. Y. Times.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

CHRONICLE OF THE COACH.

CHARING CROSS TO ILFRACOMBE. By John Denison Champlin, Jr. Illustrated by Edward L. Chichester. 12mo, $1.25.

The fascinating story of the ride through suburban England, enjoyed by Andrew Carnegie, Matthew Arnold, William Black, Edwin Abbey, and others, is here delightfully told by Mr. Champlin, who was himself one of the party.

"Even Englishmen, who fancy that they know their own country well, may find here how inexhaustible are the beauties and associations of towns through which so many travellers rush by train in order to seek the more fashionable cities of the continent as quickly as possible. Whether as a guide-book to travellers along the same route, or as an amusing account of home travel, this Chronicle cannot but please."-London Academy.

KUGLER'S ITALIAN PAINTING.

Handbook of Painting, the Italian Schools. Based on the Handbook of Kugler, originally edited by Sir Charles L. Eastlake. Fifth edition, thoroughly revised and in part rewritten by Austen Henry Layard, G.C.B., D.C.L., Corresponding Member of the Institut de France, Académie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres, Trustee of the National Gallery, etc., author of "Nineveh and its Remains." With nearly 250 illustrations. London, 1887, two vols., crown 8vo, cloth, $12.00.

THROUGH THE FIELDS WITH LINNÆUS.

A Chapter in Swedish History. By Mrs. FLORENCE CADDY, author of "Footsteps of Jeanne d'Arc," etc. With six illustrations and two maps. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, $4.50.

The work is a very important contribution to biography, and will be found of great interest by the lovers of outdoor life, as well as by those engaged in botanical studies. It is written in clear, beautiful English, and is the first adequate memoir of the great botanist.

"Deeply interesting volumes—the first biography of Linnæus in the English language written in this century.

. . . Viewed simply as interesting literature, Through the Fields with Linnæus' is far more attractive and infinitely more profitable than is a novel."—The Beacon.

Proverbs from Plymouth Pulpit.

SELECTED FROM THE

WRITINGS AND SAYINGS OF HENRY WARD BEECHER.

Revised in part by Mr. Beecher, and under revision by him at the time of his death.

12mo, Cloth, gilt top, $1.00.

The work of selecting the characteristic sayings by the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher contained in this volume was begun nearly ten years ago, at Mr. Bercher's suggestion and under his guidance. After its completion the manuscript was in his hands, and he from time to time revised and corrected it. When his ministry came to a close, he had gone patiently over about one-third of it, making many alterations, additions, and erasures. The remaining proverbs stand in the words in which Mr. Bercher originally clothed them.

A study in heredity. "Claud," or Otho Clauss, is the inheritor of a sad family history. He is the son of a German pensant who ran off with the daughter of a wealthy Breton bourgeois; failing to gain her father's forgiveness he came to America and is gaining a precarious living, when the story opens, in an obscure part of New York, as a cultivator of fine vegetables. He is a morose, jealous man, and from striking his wife, at length murders her, and is hung for the crime. "Claud," with this tragedy darkening his life, is adopted by a wealthy lady, who takes him abroad. The evil traits he has inherited bear fruit in his own painful life. fruit in his own painful life.

What does follow is a charming picture of life at a quaint old farmhouse called Coombes-Oak, where the Idens have lived for generations. The interest centres in Amaryllis, who edifies the readers by attending Ladyday fair and interests them in a charming but very old-fashioned love affair. A pleasant unworldliness lingers about the story, and this with a tendency to moralize and a dry humor are its chief features.

The scene of the story is laid in a little settlement in one of the remote steppe provinces of Russia, in the heart of a productive region. The descriptions of the picturesque scenery of the steppes, the manner in which the estates are carried on, and of the indoor life and amusements of the people are intensely interesting. "The rusty linchpin" is one of the most charming of love stories, and those who wonder at the singular title may be told this much, that a long and almost hopeless love suit is brought to a climax by the breaking down of a carriage through the loss of a linchpin. The volume contains a second story, "Luboff Archipovna," which is pathetic as well as humorous, and sheds light upon some of the curious domestic customs of the Russians. CONTRACTS AUTHORS' WITH PUB-LISHERS.

THE misunderstandings between authors and publishers, which have been the theme of so much recent discussion, and to which we referred editorially last week, are certainly reduced to a minimum by the royalty system which, happily, has been the usual basis of publishing in the United States. The bargain is a perfectly simple The publisher's annual or semi-annual copyright return, made to the author, states the number of copies on hand at last accounting and of copies printed since, and the number of copies now on hand; the difference, less copies given away for review and like purposes, gives the number on which the stipulated percentage on the advertised retail price is due. The only possibility of deception here is in case the publisher lies, and gives false figures. We have never heard that allegation made against any reputable publisher, nor do we believe there has ever been occasion for it.

This transaction is the simplest possible of any business relation. If the price of a book is $1.00, and the royalty 10 per cent., the author gets his 10 cents on each copy sold. But in this transaction there are several forgotten elements-to the disadvantage of the publisher. Whether the book sells or not, the publisher must pay paper-maker, printer, and binder for the entire edition. The publisher never gets the retail price. vertising bills must be covered, whether the book pays or not. Result: the author is sure of getting something; the publisher may have not only to throw away his time, but to stand an actual | year will be one in the Putnam firm, when Mr.

money loss. It is the overlooking of these facts by authors which is often so irritating to publishers. Reckoning on the average of books, as the result of somewhat wide experience, we should say that the 10-per-cent, royalty reaches, practically and simply, the same result which the "half-profits" system was intended to reachthe even division of the net profit on actual sales.

On a book of small sale the publisher nets a On a book of large sale the publisher's "half" gets to be a good deal bigger than the author's 10 per cent. This has naturally given rise to dissatisfaction on the part of authors who have established reputations, and whose books are so sure to sell that no insurance need be reckoned. The result of this has been that in some cases such authors have insisted on larger percentages-of 15 and in a few cases of 20 per cent. The latter, however, is a risky percentage for a publisher to promise, even to a very successful author. Mr. Longfellow was, in a measure, his own publisher, his publishers being really selling agents, for the new book was in later years put into plates by him. But few authors can profitably do as he did, and the royalty is the fairest and most satisfactory method in at least nine cases out of ten.

If successful authors, however, obtain all the profit, or the bigger half of the profit, on their books, how is the publisher to pay the losses on the risks taken for new authors?—and all authors were new authors once. Under the 10-per-cent. system authors pay, in years of success, for the fostering care advanced to them out of the profits from their illustrious predecessors, just as an adult pays at mature age to his children the care given to him by his parents in the days of his own childhood. Clearly, if there is no margin for risks, the publishers cannot take risks. result would be that publishers would more and more hesitate, and that "authors' books" would be more and more the rule. This severe repression of budding genius, unless it had funds as well as genius, might be advantageous to literature-and might not.

But whatever is the system used, of one thing publishers should be more than careful. They are business men; authors, as a rule, are not. They should, therefore, take every means to make their contracts simple, and to see that each author understands thoroughly the bearings of everything to which he assents. We believe that American publishers are, as a rule, careful to do this, and this is one of the reasons why so few American authors change imprints on their successive books.

LITERARY PROPERTY AND INTERNA-TIONAL COPYRIGHT.

BY GEORGE HAVEN PUTNAM.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED APRIL 2, 1887, BEFORE THE LIBRARY SCHOOL OF COLUMBIA COLLEGE.

To a publisher, whose work consists in the buying and selling of literary property, the subject naturally possesses so personal and absorbing an interest that he may easily lose sight of its actual proportions, and overestimate its importance for the world at large. The tanner at the siege of Ostend, when he was asked for a suggestion as to the best means of strengthening the defences of the city, replied that, in his opinion, there was "nothing like leather;" and the publisher is, in like manner, tempted to assume that the world's perplexities will all be straightened out when men are once brought to a proper understanding of the relative value of ideas, and are prepared to expend a fair proportion of their earnings in exchange for ideas put into literary form.

A publisher is, however, not in a position to speak of literary property with the same feeling of originating responsibility as that to which a baker could lay claim in talking about bread, or a shoemaker in discoursing of shoes; and, in fact, the maker of the literature, he whom the Romans called the "poet," may consider it an impertinence for the publisher to express any opinions at all on literary creations. The publisher is, of course, but the middleman, or at best what the Scotch call the "undertaker"—the last ominous name having perhaps a peculiar appropriateness for one who has so much to do with buried hopes, and who acts as chief mourner for so many literary fames that do not succeed in putting on immortality.

The publisher may also claim that if he is not the great first cause of literature, he may often serve as the immediate incentive to its production, and that not a few literary ideas might never have succeeded in materializing themselves if it had not been for his suggestions or initiative.

The writer once heard of a publisher who, ambitious to cast a poetic halo over his calling, tried his hand at a paraphrase on the well-known lines on Franklin:

"Eripuit ccelo fulmen, sceptrumque tyrannis," and suggested, as an expression of his own ideal:

"Eripuit poetis animam, aurumque populo,"

"From the authors he seized their brains and from the public its gold."

Certainly a most desirable result, and the picture of our publisher in the guise of a prestidigitateur, exercising an infallible King Midas touch on the material submitted to him, is (at least to us of the guild) a very fascinating one. But brains, the proceeds of which can be converted into a satisfactory cash equivalent, are scarcer than the average writer or the average critic is apt to imagine, and quite a large proportion of the productions which are honestly evolved from somebody's cerebral convolutions, and which, therefore, come properly under the head of literary property, are no more convertible into current coin of the realm than are the notes of the late Confederacy.

Drone, who is, doubtless, the best American authority on the subject, defines literary property as "the exclusive right of the owner to possess, use, and dispose of intellectual productions," and copyright as "the exclusive right of the owner to multiply and to dispose of copies of an intellectual production." The English statute defines copyright to mean "the sole and exclusive liberty of printing or otherwise multiplying copies of any subject to which the word is herein applied." The American statute speaks of copyright in a book as "the sole liberty of printing, reprinting, publishing . . . and vending the same." The French Constitutional Convention adopted in January, 1791, a report prepared by Chopelin, which declares that "La plus sacré, la plus inattaquable, et, si je puis parler ainsi, la plus personelle, de toutes les proprietés, est l'ouvrage, fruit de la pensée d'un ecrivain.

Coppinger, a recent English authority, says that the right of an author "to the productions of his mental exertions may be classed among the species of property acquired by occupancy, being founded on labor and invention" founded on labor and invention."

Francis Lieber says: "The main roots of all property whatsoever are appropriation and production. . Property . . . precedes government. If a man appropriates what belongs to no one (for instance, the trunk of a tree), and if he produces out of that tree a new thing (for instance, a canoe), this product is verily his own; and any one who in turn attempts to appropriate it without the process of exchange, is an intruder, a robber. . . . The whole right of property rests on appropriation and production; and I appeal to the intuitive conviction of every thinking man to say whether a literary work, such as Baker's description of his toilsome journeys, or Goethe's 'Faust,' is not a production in the fullest sense of the word, even more so than a barrel of herrings which have been appropriated in the North Sea, and pickled and barrelled by the fisherman; and whether any one has any right to meddle with this property by production any more than you or I with the barrel of herrings?"

All the authorities unite in the opinion that there can be no property in a production of the mind unless it is expressed in a definite form of words. But the property is not in the words alone; it is in the intellectual creation, which language is merely a means of expressing and communicating.

It is evident that copyright is in its nature akin to patent right, with this distinction, however, that while the latter represents the legal recognition of the existence of property in an idea or a group of ideas, the former expresses the property right only in the form in which the ideas have been expressed.

International patent rights have, however, been recognized and carried into effect more generally than have copyrights, and the patentee of an improved toothpick would to-day be able to secure a wider recognition of his right than has been accorded to the author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" or "Adam Bede."

One of the most noteworthy exceptions to this consensus of civilized opinion on the status of literary property is presented by Henry C. Carey. He took the position (in his Letters on Copyright, 1854) that "Ideas are the common property of mankind. Facts are everybody's facts, Words are free to all men. Examine Macaulay's 'History of England' and you will find that the body is composed of what is common property." Of Prescott, Bancroft, and Webster he says: "They did nothing but reproduce ideas that were common prop-Of Scott and Irving: "They made no contribution to knowledge." According to Carey, therefore, the author of a book has no right of property in the book that he has made. He took the common stock and worked it over, and one man has as good a right to the result as another. If the author is allowed to be the owner of his works, the public are deprived of their rights. Property in books is robbery.

But this position of Carey's is simply a partial or specific application of the well-known formula of Proudhon: "Property is robbery," a theory which it is not necessary to discuss in this paper.

It is not easy to fix the date when the conception of literary property first took shape. Chaldeans, in the ruins of whose cities we find the first known literature, notwithstanding their high degree of civilization, must in one respect have been a benighted folk, for they appear to have got along without publishers. Their books, consisting exclusively of baked tiles, required in their production the co-operation only of the baker or potter. From the investigations of George Smith in the big library of Babilu and the researches of other explorers among the ruins in other mounds, it would appear as if the works produced, of which examples have been found in the departments of Agriculture, Astrology, Historical Annals, Military Science, and the Science of Government, had appeared in what would now be called "strictly limited editions," comprising a dozen or half a dozen copies, for the libraries of the different palaces, or in some instances a single copy only, for the King's own collection.

If the Chaldean author could only have realized that 5000 years later (for many of the books discovered date from more than 3000 B.C.) their compositions would be referred to in the New York Library School, he might perhaps have been consoled for the limited number of his contemporary readers.

I am told that the earliest literary production which has thus far come to light is a Chaldean clay tablet (now in the British Museum) which, according to Smith & Hommel, was inscribed not less than 4000 years B.C., and which presents a very full and graphic account of the flood. The narrative is quite similar in many of its details to that in Genesis, differing mainly in being fuller and in its intelligent use of seafaring terms.

The anonymous writer of the Chaldean story would, however, not have had much ground for complaint against the later Hebrew scribe for infringement of copyright, inasmuch as the Hebrew story appears not to have been given to the world until some 2000 years later, which is a longer term than the most zealous defenders of literary property have thus far considered necessary.

The conception of literary property was known to the Romans. A compensation of some sort to the author was regarded as a natural right, and any one contravening it as little better than a The first germs of a recognition of proprobber. erty in thought are to be found in the agreements which authors entered into with the booksellers for the multiplication and sale of copies of their works, and in the custom to treat as unlawful any infringement upon the bookseller's right in a work which had been transferred to him. The booksellers among the Romans succeeded, through the use of slave labor, in producing duplicates of their manuscripts at so low a cost that the productions of the first printing-presses were hardly cheaper. Martial records, in one of his epigrams, that a copy of his "Xenii" could be bought from the bookseller Tryphon for four sesterces, the equivalent of about twelve and a half cents (which is less than the present cost of the cheapest Leipsic edition). He grumbles at this price as being too high, and claims that the bookseller would have been able to get a profit from a charge of half that amount. This poet appears to have had no less than four publishers in charge of the sale of his works, one of whom was a freedman of the second Lucensis. The latter issued a special pocket edition of the "Epigrams" for which the poet prepared the advertisements for the booksellers, putting them in the form of epigrams, but not neglecting to specify the form and price of each book as well as the place where it was offered for sale. Horace refers to the brothers Sosii as his publishers, but complains that while his works brought gold to them, for their author they earned only fame in distant lands and with posterity.

These brothers Sosii were probably the largest publishers of the Augustan era. They are reported to have had in their employ no less than 2000 slaves as copylsts, exclusive of their readers and binders. A recent writer in Book-Lore calculates that such an establishment could on necessity turn out an edition of 1000 copies of such a volume as the second book of "Martial's Epigrams," comprising 540 lines, fairly transcribed, bound and ready for sale, within the space of one hour, and he quotes as authority for the statement, the report of the poet himself:

"Haec una peragit Librarius hora," Epig. II.

*I, which may be rendered "These (copies) the publishers 'put through' in the space of one hour." We have, since Martial, had 1700 years experience in bookmaking, but I doubt whether the most persisting and pertinacious poet in the Authors' Club could manage to get an edition of his new poem completed say, by the Harpers, in less than twelve times the one hour which sufficed for the Brothers Socii.

Terence sold his Eunuchus to the Aediles, and his "Hecyra" to the player Roscius; while Juvenal reports that Statius would have starved if he had not succeeded in selling to the actor Paris his tragedy of Agave. Such sales were considered as founded upon natural justice. No man could possibly have a right to absorb for himself the profit from the sale of the works of another's labor. It is apparent from many similar references, that, under the Roman Empire, authors were in the habit of transferring to booksellers, for such consideration as they could obtain, the right to duplicate and to sell their works, and that, under the trade usages, they were protected in so doing

There was no imperial act covering such transfers, and it does not appear that in any division of the Roman law was there provision for the ex-clusive right in the "copy" of literary material. It is nevertheless the case that the Roman jurists interested themselves in the question of immaterial property, but it was apparently rather as a theoretical speculation than as a study in practical law. Some of the earlier discussions as to the nature of property in ideas appears to have turned upon the question as to whether such property should take precedence over that in the material which happened to be made use of for the expression of the ideas. The disciples of Proculus, for instance, maintained that the occupation of alien material so as to make of it a new thing, gave a property right to him who had so reworked or reshaped it; while the school of Sabinus insisted that the ownership in the material must carry with it the title to whatever was produced upon the material. Justinian, following the opinion of Gaius, took a middle ground, pointing out that the decision must be influenced by the possibility of restoring the material to its original form, and more particularly by the question as to whether the material, or that which had been produced upon it, was the more essen-This opinion of Gaius, given in the second century, appears to have been originally given with reference to the ownership of a certain table upon which a picture had been painted, and the decision was in favor of the artist. This decision contains an unmistakable recognition of immaterial property, not, to be sure, in the sense of a right to exclusive reproduction, but in the particular application, that while material property depends upon the substance, immaterial property, that is to say, property in ideas, depends upon the For some centuries following the destruction of the Roman Empire, during which literary undertakings were confined almost entirely to the monasteries, the Roman usage, under which the authors could dispose of their works to booksellers, and the latter could be secured control of the property purchases, was entirely forgotten. But while no limitation was placed on the duplication of works of literature, the public demand for such duplications was very slight

By a statute of the University of Paris, issued in 1223, the Parisian booksellers (who were in large part dependent upon the University) were enjoined to extend, as far as practicable, the duplication of works of a certain class. The business of bookseller at that time consisted as much in the renting out for reading and copying of authentic manuscript versions as in the sale of manuscript copies. In the University of Paris, as well as in that of Bologna, a statute specified the least number of copies of a manuscript, usually 120, that a bookseller must keep in stock, and the prices for loaning manuscripts were also fixed by statute.

The difficulty and expense attending the reproduction of manuscripts was very considerable (much greater than in the early days of the Roman Empire), and when, therefore, an author desired to secure a wide circulation for his work, he came to regard the reproduction of copies, not as a reserved right and source of income, but as a service to himself, which he was very ready to facilitate and even to compensate. We find here one of the earliest recognitions of the publisher not as mere payer of royalties, but as a philanthropist.

Throughout the Middle Ages, whatever immaterial property in the realms of science, art, or technics, obtained recognition and protection, was held in ownership, not by individuals, but by churches, monasteries. or universities. Before the invention of printing, the writers of the middle ages were fortunate if, without a ruinous expenditure, they could succeed in getting their productions before the public. The printingpress brought with it the possibility of a compensation for literary labor. Very speedily, however, the unrestricted rivalry of printers brought into existence competing and unauthorized editions which diminished the prospects of profit, or entailed loss for the authors, editors, and printers of the original issue and thus discouraged further similar undertakings, a condition of things which has persisted far beyond the 15th century.

As there was no general enactment under which the difficulty could be met, protection for the authors and their representatives was sought through special "privileges," obtained for separate works as issued. The earliest privilege of the kind was, according to the German writer, Putter, that conceded by the Republic of Venice, Jan. 3, 1491, to the jurist, Peter of Ravenna, securing to him and to the publishers selected by him the exclusive right for the printing and sale of his work "Phœnix." No term of years was named in this "privilege," which may, therefore, be considered as still in force, and which might, if we had an international arrangement with Italy, have been cited in 1854 as an objection to the publication of Derby's "Phœnixiana." It appears. It appears, however, that most of the early Italian enactments in regard to literature were framed, not so much with reference to the protection of authors, as for the purpose of inducing printers (acting also as publishers) to undertake certain literary enterprises which were believed to be of importance to the community.

The Republic of Venice, the Dukes of Florence and Leo. X., and other Popes, conceded at different times to certain printers the exclusive privilege of printing, for specified terms, seldom apparently exceeding fourteen years, editions of certain classic authors. At this time, when the business of the production and distribution of books was in its infancy, such undertakings must have been attended with exceptional risk, and have called for no little enlightened enterprise on the part of the printers.

After Italy, it is in France that we find the next formal recognition of the rights of property in literature, and the penalties for infringing copyright were, until the Revolution, heavier in France than anywhere else in Europe. It was argued that such infringement constituted a worse crime than the stealing of goods from the house of a neighbor, for in the latter case some negligence might possibly be imputed to the owner, while in the former it was stealing what had been confided to the public honor.

The earliest German enactment in regard to literary property was the "privilege" accorded in Nuremberg in 1501, to the poet Conrad Celtes, for an edition of the work of the poet Kroswista, the nom de plume of Helena von Rossow, a nun of the Benedictine Cloister of Gardesheim. As this author had been dead for 600 years, the "privilege" was evidently not issued for her protection, but must have had for its purpose the idea of encouraging Celtes in a praiseworthy (and probably unremunerative) undertaking.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE ON THE PA-CIFIC COAST.

ALREADY we hear from every section of the country protests, in more or less pronounced form, against the workings of the Interstate Commerce Bill. Especially do those who clamored loudest for some method of "relief" now declare against its effect on their particular portion of country. It reminds us very much of one of the late Mr. Æsop's fables—the one of the dissatissatisfied little frogs.

The following circular shows that the booktrade on the Pacific coast does not mean to suffer individually, and we presume this is but the beginning:

Owing to the enormous advance in freight on all goods which we handle, it becomes necessary for us to advance our prices and to withdraw any quotations which we have made you heretofore.

In notifying you of this fact, we desire to say that on all your future purchases we will give you the benefit of the lowest possible rates.

A CHANGE IN A BOSTON FIRM.

RETIREMENT OF MR. CUPPLES FROM THE "OLD CORNER."

THE announcement that Mr. Joseph G. Cupples, of the firm of Cupples, Upham & Co., had retired from that house, leaving the other partners-Charles L. Damrell and Henry M. Upham -to continue the retail business under the firmname of Damrell & Upham, while it came suddenly, was not wholly unexpected. Mr. Cupples' ambition ran chiefly in the direction of publishing enterprises, and as it was found exceedingly difficult to carry on this branch with the large retail trade in books, which has finally absorbed every inch of the available space in the quaint old shop, and in order that he might devote himself more to the publishing business, it was considered to be in the interests of all parties that the separation be made.

The present firm of Cupples, Upham & Co., as will be remembered, was established four years ago upon the retirement of Mr. Alexander Williams from the book-trade, the gentlemen comprising it having been partners of Mr. Williams. Mr. Upham had charge of the Episcopal Church business, which has rapidly grown in volume in recent years; Mr. Damrell took the position which Mr. W. D. Ticknor used to hold in the old firm of Ticknor & Fields, and Mr. Cupples became the general manager of the retail business.

The firm has steadily increased its publishing business, led in this direction by Mr. Cupples. It has brought out a number of notable and successful books, and has also published the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal, a periodical which has gained much headway under the editorship of Dr. G. B. Shattuck. With this plant Mr. Cuppler of Dr. G. B. Shattuck.

ples is to establish himself on the edge of the Back Bay district, at No. 94 Boylston Street, under the firm-name of Cupples & Co. Here he will combine the publishing interests, which he takes from the old firm, with such retail trade in new books and special lines of literary connection as can be made supplemental to what is intended to correspond to a New York up-town bookstore. Messrs. Merrifield, Abbott, and Stillman, clerks of the old firm, accompany Mr. Cupples to his new quarters. Much interest on the part of his friends, says the Herald, "will follow Mr. Cupples in his new and more personal ventures. He now steps from the front of the 'Old Corner Book-store, he has been known to all the literary leaders in Boston as a retail bookseller, to the rank of the youngest of the Boston publishers, having given so much assurance of what is in him that there is no reasonable doubt of his success. The parties who are left at the 'Corner' are known as thoroughly trained business men, who have grown up with the large and popular trade which they will continue. The Episcopal interest will remain where it is, and the 'Old Corner' will be the same that it has been since the careers began of those who are still in middle life.

THE SPRING TRADE SALE.

The regular Spring Trade Sale began on the morning of the 19th inst., with a remarkably fine day and a good-sized crowd. Among the out-of-town people present, either as sellers, buyers, or lookers-on, we noticed Mr. Wm. Lee, Bradlee Whidden, E. R. Stevens, of Saratoga; H. S. Hutchinson, of New Bedford; H. Gregory, of Providence, R. I.; J. K. Pratt, of North Middleboro, Mass.; L. B. Kerr, of Lancaster, Pa.; J. Highlands, of Philadelphia; Edwin S. Stuart, of Philadelphia; N. Bangs Williams, of Lee & Shepard; Mr. Caldwell, of Henry Altemus; J. Hardy, of Roberts Bros.; C. E. Brown, of Estes & Lauriat; Horace Ridings, of the J. B. Lippincott Co.; E. Campion, of Porter & Coates, and J. M. Dean & Co., of Williamsport, Pa. Maxwell & Co., of Chicago; Estill & Co., of Mansfield, O., and Davenport Bros., of Plymouth, Pa., were also represented. New York City was represented by the principals or buyers of nearly all its book-stores.

The first day started off with a large representative invoice contributed by Lee & Shepard. Genial Mr. Lee was on the stand, and had the satisfaction of seeing his stock sold rapidly and at good prices. In fact, until the time of our going to press, there was very little inclination of slaughtering any but the plugs. After Lee & Shepard an invoice contributed by the Aldine Book Publishing Co. was disposed of. Then came Thos. R. Knox & Co., Wm. T. Comstock, Macmillan & Co., the National Publishing Co., and Hurst & Co.

The second day opened with the Worthington Company's invoice, comprising a fair assortment of their publications. The prices realized throughout were remarkably good, and the best of feeling prevailed. Then followed goodly lists contributed by Cassell & Co., John Highlands, Bradlee Whidden. Roberts Bros. and two or three smaller invoices sold for the "account of whom it may concern."

Medical and Surgical Journal, a periodical which has gained much headway under the editorship of Dr. G. B. Shattuck. With this plant Mr. Cup-rest of the day was given up to the sale of smaller invoices contributed by H. L. Hastings, the Arundel Book-Store, J. C. Chilton Publishing Co., Fords, Howard & Hulbert, P. F. Collier, Doyle & Whittle, J. S. Ogilvie & Co., Schaefer & Koradi, Leon & Bro., P. J. Kenedy, Alex. T. Loyd & Co., W. Swan Sonnenschein & Co., D. L. Guernsey, the Akerman Co., Edw. Meeks, A. T. B. De Witt, E. B. Treat, and a number of anonymous lists.

We expect to give in another issue an account of the disposition made of the plates that were offered.

CANADA WORRYING OVER COPY-RIGHT.

From the N. Y. World.

Mr. Edgar asked in Parliament on the 18th inst., whether it was the intention of the Government to lay before the house this session any measure of legislation for placing Canadian publishers upon the same footing as American publishers in regard to the reprinting of British copyright works, or whether it was proposed to invite the house to address Her Majesty upon the subject of modifying any imperial legislation which is restrictive of the powers of the Canadian Parliament respecting copyright in Canada. The Minister of Justice stated in reply that this important matter was now engaging the attention of the Dominion Government. At present Canada cannot legislate in matters affecting copyright.

JOURNALISTIC NOTES.

Scribner's Magazine for May will contain a poem by Philip Bourke Marston, entitled "At Last," to which is appended a short biographical note by Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton. The same number will also contain shorter poems by Susan Coolidge, Percival Lowell, and Mrs. Piatt.

MRS. CHARLES W. PETERSON, the widow of the late Mr. Peterson, who so long and so successfully edited Peterson's Magazine, has decided to assume the work of publishing and editing the periodical herself. She has been for years associated with her husband in the work of preparation, but rather of the literary than the business side of the magazine, and there is every reason to believe that she will add one more to the many women who have been successful in the higher work of journalism.

WITH the May number the Southern Bivonac of Kentucky will cease publication, and its goodwill, plates, etc., will pass into the hands of The Century Co., who will fill unexpired subscriptions with The Century Magazine. The Associated Press dispatch announcing that the periodical will be continued by The Century Co., is an error in form of statement. It is not probable that any of its unused material will appear in The Century, but some of the War articles which have already been printed in the Southern Bivouac, it is expected, will be used in "Battles and Leaders of the Civil War," the subscription-book which The Century Co. is about to issue. The Bivouac, which had been the journal of the Southern Historical Society, was purchased about two years ago by B. F. Avery & Sons, of Louisville, and during its life has been a creditable representative of Southern letters, devoted mainly to the publication of papers regarding the Civil War.

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

MR. JOHN GLENN, of Marcus Ward & Co., sailed for London on the 13th inst.

"Mosey's War Reminiscences, and Stuart's Cavalry Campaigns," by John S. Mosby, will be published by Geo. A. Jones & Co., Boston.

LITTLE, BROWN & Co. have now ready the volume on "Cycling" in the Baaminton Library, by Viscount Bury and G. Lacy Hillier, with a number of illustrations by the Viscount and Joseph Pennell.

H. WUNDERLICH & Co. announce that an exhibition of oil paintings by Elihu Vedder, whose remarkable illustrations to the "Rubáiyat" of Omar Khayyám, are now so well known, was opened at their gallery, 868 Broadway, and will continue until Saturday, May 7th.

A NEW novel in the famous No Name Series is soon to make its appearance. It is a study with a large basis of reality of the "Cracker" element, so called, in Florida life, and will be issued under the striking title of "Cracker Jo." It is written by an author whose works have enjoyed immense popularity.

BAKER, VOORHIS & Co. have just issued a little volume entitled "Notes on the New York Law of Life Insurance," by Charles B. Alexander, which will be useful to any one who wishes to know the main points of the law of New York on the subject named. It does not pretend to be a formal treatise upon the subject.

Cassell & Co. will issue shortly "John Noman," by Charles Henry Beckett. The characters, it is said, have been drawn with a firm hand, and the marked individuality which they possess and hold to the end shows Mr. Beckett to be a literary workman of unusual power. The interest of the reader is enlisted from the very beginning, and it grows more absorbing as the perusal progresses over the chain of incidents through which the plot is developed.

D. APPLETON & Co. publish this week "Proverbs from Plymouth Pulpit," noticed in our last issue, and "Public Debts," an essay in the science of finance by Prof. Henry C. Adams, of the Michigan and Cornell Universities. The sub-title of Dr. Oswald's book on "The Poison Problem" should read "the cause and cure of intemperance," not curse, as printed in their advertisement and our notice of the book in our last issue.

LAUNDER & MACDONALD, 17 Bond St., N. Y., are introducing what promises to be a useful and desirable accessory to the library and the outfit of travellers. It is in the shape of an album made of adhesive leaves and is intended for preserving unmounted photographs. The modus operandi is the simplest imaginable. To do the work neatly and effectually it is only necessary to immerse the photograph in pure cold water until thoroughly limp; then take out and drain a few seconds and lay it in position in the album, taking off the surplus water with a piece of blotting-Then insert a few sheets of dry blottingpaper, close the book and place it under a heavy weight, or, if convenient, in a copying press, until dry. One will then have the photograph mounted and preserved in permanent shape at very little cost. "The Launder Adhesive Album," as it is named, is handsomely bound and retails at a resonable price. The address of the firm after the first of May will be 116 to 118 East 14th Street.

PRANG'S

Christmas and New-Year Cards,

Season 1887-1888.

We have the pleasure to announce to the Trade that our line of Cards and Novelties for the coming is now ready, and in the hands of our agents and travellers. It is sparkling with new ideas, and will attract general attention. Decorative Art has been laid under contribution in many directions, and Designers, Lithographers, and Poets have vied with each other in the perfection of this line with the happiest results. We feel sure that it will be pronounced a complete success.

CHRISTMAS AND NEW-YEAR

In addition to our regular Card line we offer this season an unusually attractive and varied line of in elegant make-ups and on entirely new mounts, most of them HAND-PAINTED AND HAND-DECORATED.

Among our novelties in mounts we beg to call special attention to our

METALLINE DECORATION

which is entirely new, and will be a leading feature for the coming Holiday Season. It is an exact imitation of decorated metal, and not any kind of process work by which quantities of the same article can be produced, but every bit of the work is thereby retaining the individual touch of the artist.

The effects, in the most artistic designs in Old Silver, Old Gold, Aluminium, Nickel, Brass, Copper, Bronze, etc., are very rich and striking.

CALENDARS.

We offer this year several Calendars in entirely new form, to which special attention is called.

HOLIDAY BOOKS.

Several Illustrated Books have been added to our line in new and attractive binding, as follows:

THE CHRISTMAS PROCESSIONAL. By Louis K. Harlow.

THE VOICE OF THE GRASS. By Louis K. Harlow.

ECHOES FROM ALONG SHORE. By Louis K. Harlow.

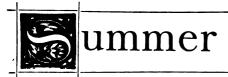

THE HOME OF EVANGELINE. By Louis K. Harlow.

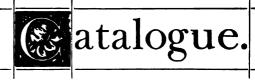

A GAY DAY FOR 7. By Mrs. Rose Mueller Sprague.

A LITERARY COMPANION FOR THE SEASON.

PUBLISHED BY

SEASON OF 1887.

To RETAIL DEALERS:

The Summer Catalogue, issued now for ten years, has been found so useful and profitable by enterprising dealers, that it has become a regular feature of the trade. The eleventh issue, in a special pamphlet adapted for imprint circulation all through the summer, will be published in connection with The Publishers' Weekly, early in June.

The imprint editions will contain, in addition to a catalogue of guide-books and light literature for summer reading, an entirely new selection of reading-matter both of a practical and entertaining character, chiefly intended for the use and amusement of tourists, pleasure-seekers, and visitors of summer resorts.

Booksellers should remember that, while summer is usually a dull time, the sales of light literature, etc., can be pushed to make a successful business even in this season. The c asses who travel are of course those who have money to spend, even in dull times, and the summer is the time when very many bookbuyers do the greater part of their reading. The tide of travel this year is likely to set toward home resorts, instead of across sea. Booksellers at or near summer resorts should therefore especially avail themselves of this publication, while city dealers should remember that it will be also useful to tempt stay-athomes to make investments or to follow up customers otherwise out of reach.

13 Orders for imprint editions at subscription rates should be sent in at once.

THE PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY,

S. C. Griggs & Co., CHICAGO.

Will publish on the 23d of April a new volume by the late Dr. Benjamin F. Taylor, entitled:

Theophilus Trent;

Or, Old Times in the Oak Openings.

One Volume, 12mo, $1.00.

Dr. E. A. Woods, of Cleveland, wrote the author after examining the advance sheets: "Your plot is finely conceived and well carried out. I predict a wide circulation for the book."

Professor A. M. Beebe, D.D., of Madison University, Hamilton, N. Y., wrote Dr. Taylor: "The story is full of interest, a faithful portraiture of characters and scenes in the earlier settlements of the Northwest. The creations are natural and real. The perspective and coloring of the scenes marvellously distinct and vivid. Humor, wit, pathos, and heroism are abundant and most happily blended, and on everything there falls the light of a poetic ideal."

DR. TAYLOR'S OTHER WORKS.

Complete Edition of the Poetical Works of Benj. F. TAYLOR, I.L.D. A handsome volume, containing an excellent portrait of the author from a painting by G. P. A. Healy. $1.75.

"This book ought to be read by every young man in the country."—Utica (N. Y.) Press.

"We know no book of its kind so likely to be influential in aiding in the formation of character."—Philadelphia Episcopal Recorder.

"In our judgment Mr. Tilley has proved himself master of the situation, and performed his task with the ability and tact that will make his book a positive blessing to young readers of the thoughtful class."—New England Journal of Education.

"Our author blows a note from the Spartan fife, and demands courage, hard work, and self-control. His first essay is on Promptness. To read it is enough to give the most slugglish nature an impulse towards activity and -Chicago Tribune.

AMERICAN TRADE-MARK CASES.

Several volumes of Trade-mark cases and Trade-mark digests have been published from time to time. The last edition of cases is that of Mr. Rowland Cox, published in 1880, and which contains an abstract of all Trade-mark in 1880, and which contains an abstract of all Trade-mark cases reported down to December, 1879. The last digest is that of CODDINGTON, published in 1878.

The present volume is designed to embrace the field of both of the books above mentioned from the date of their publication to the present time. It will contain a complete report of all the reported cases decided by Courts, in the United States, both State and Federal, as well as by the Commissioner of Patents, and the briefs of counsel where such have been obtained.

by the Commissioner of Fatents, and the briefs of counsel where such have been obtained.

It will also contain a subject digest of law points decided by the cases published. This volume will be of special value to the legal profession in all parts of the country, because the remedies for infringement of trademarks now at the command of trade-mark owners lie entirely in the Equity Courts, both State and Federal, and arise under the common law, except in a few of the States where trade-mark statutes exist. While the Federal statute was in existence the practice in trade-mark cases was confined to the Federal Courts, and in great measure to attorneys making a specialty of practice in those courts; but at present, with such a volume at hand, any State practitioner may with confidence undertake a trade-mark case. A system of reference from digest to syllabus, and from syllabus to section of opinion, has been adopted in printing these cases, which the editors feel will be of material assistance in using the volume.

The cases collected are gathered from almost every State of the Union, and from about one hundred and fifty volumes.

State of the Union, and from about one hundred and fifty volumes.

Compiled and edited by Benjamin Price and Arthur Stewart, of the Baltimore Bar.

Will make a volume of upwards of 700 pages; will be published in the best Law-Book style.

Price, $7.50.

PROPHECY FULFILLED.

THE BATTLE OF BIETIGHEIm.

The French are building barracks upon the very spot where the author of "Bietigheim" puts the American troops in the supposed battle where Gen. Boulanger and the allied army force the passage of the German frontier. This partial fulfilment of the author's prophecy is shown in an article from a Strasburg paper of recent date.

[From "Bietigheim" (pages 81 and 82), written January, 1886.]

[From the Alsace Journal, Strasburg, January 25, 1887.]

"The heavy purchases of lumber, planks, and rafters made by contractors from France a fortnight ago are for building barracks near Gerardmer. . . . In the vicinity of Epinal and St. Die. In this part of the Vosges the garrisons are to be re-enforced by 20,000 men. There is talk of 3000 men coming to Gerardmer, and the same number to Carcieux; the garrisons at St. Die and Brunjeres are also to be re-enforced."

This and other striking verifications of certain passages of "Bietigheim" should not fail to attract great attention to this remarkable and timely book.

NOTES IN SEASON.

HARPER & BROTHERS publish this week "The Russian Church and Russian Dissent," by Albert F. Heard, formerly Consul-General for Russia at Shanghai. The book is intended for the general reader, to whom no trustworthy source of information on this subject has hitherto been accessible. It comprises a historical account of the origin and progress of the orthodox church of Russia, with a statement of the present condition and that of the clergy, and traces the causes and consequences of the schism which arose in the seventeenth century, and which has given birth to innumerable sects, whose general characteristics and tendencies Mr. Heard describes. Messrs

Harper will publish immediately Mr. Howells' Modern Italian Poets."

ROBERTS BROS. have just ready "Dante," a sketch of his life and works, by May Alden Ward, delightfully written and clearly and admirably arranged; "Dante Gabriel Rosetti's Collected Works," two volumes comprising all of his prose and poetical writings, with thirty new poems, edited, with a preface and notes, by Wm. M. Rossetti; a new American edition of "Dante and his Circle, with the Italian poets who preceded him," by Dante Gabriel Rossetti; a collection of Helen Hunt Jackson's shorter stories entitled "Between Whiles;" "Mrs. Siddons," by Mrs. Nina H. Kennard, author of "Rachel," a new volume in the Famous Women series; "London of To-day," an illustrated handbook for the season of 1887, by Charles Eyre Pascoe.

A. D. F. RANDOLPH & Co. have prepared a capital book for the tourist and those who have opportunities for passing their vacation in the country in the "Vacation Journal, or, diary of outings." The book is neatly gotten up and contains an almanac, calendar of the moon's phases, table of morning and evening stars, signal-service flags with explanation, and rates of postage. There is also a full-page diary for six months, each page with a felicitous poetical quotation appropriate to each season; a flora of the Eastern and Middle States; rules of lawn-tennis, and blank page for records of games, for autographs, for names and addresses, and miscellaneous memoranda. They have also ready a new edition of their book for ocean travellers—" Across the Atlantic."

D. LOTHROP & Co. have just published "Life Among the Germans," by Emma Louise Parry, a work which makes us thoroughly acquainted and at home with the Germans, fresh in its details, bright and interesting in its easy flowing narrative, and full of substance; "When I Was a Boy in China," by Yan Phon Lee, an interesting work giving the experiences of the author at home and in this country, where he is now a student; "Romance of a Letter," a love story by Lowell Choate; "John Spicer's Lectures," by Abby Morton Diaz, a bright book of wise nonsense by the author of "The William Henry Letters;" Stories of Great Men" and "Stories of Remarkable Women," two books giving sketches of fifty men and women. whom the world calls great, from a religious. point of view; and "Ned Melbourne's Mission, a good book for a Sunday-school library.

A. C. McClurg & Co. will publish a new edition of the issue of "Sappho" prepared two years ago by H. T. Wharton and J. A. Symonds. The new edition will contain all the matter of the earlier edition, namely: (1) a popular account of all that is known of the history of the poetess; (2) a complete text in Greek of every known word of hers, with a literal translation in English prose; (3) all the better renderings into English verse which have been made of them; and (4) a bibliography. Since the first edition was published, Mr. Wharton has been so fortunate as to procure, from the Director of the Egyptian Museum in Berlin, an autotype fac-simile of a newly discovered fragment of Sappho; and this appears in the new edition, together with other additions and alterations which are of the utmost interest as throwing fresh light on Sappho's genius. The additional matter amounts to some torry pages. The new edition is printed from Greek type of great beauty.

This journal runs over ten months of a young Italian boy's school life from October to the following July. It is a charming narrative of the events of his little world the good deeds and misdeeds of his school-fellows, the kindness and wisdom of his teachers, and the methods of his school. It also includes letters from his father and mother rich in good advice, and a little story for each month, which is read to the scholars for the lesson it in-Altogether a most instructive and entertaining book for boys

- Crawford, F. Marion. Saracinesca. N. Y., Macmillan & Co., 1887. c. 4+432 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The scene is laid entirely among the patrician society of Rome in the year 1865—a class that Mr. Crawford has carefully studied and observed. The Prince Saracinesca, his only son and heir Giovanni, and a beautiful girl whom the latter loves, the Duchesse d'Astrardente, who is married to an infirm old man, are the leading character. There is the application of the property of the ters. There is also a political element in the story, one of the characters being a spy of the Liberal cause. A good deal of society gossip and excellent delineation of Roman scenes and characters make it a most delight-

A story of Mississippi some forty years ago. The boy who tells the story is sixteen when he begins the narrative; "our fellows" are his "chums" of the adjacent plantations. The Choctaw Indians, then very numerous in the South, gave them a great deal of trouble; added to the Indian depredations were the attacks of the "Swamp Dragoons," a set of lawless young men hiding in the swamps. With these episodes and many hunting adventures the book does not lack excitement.

Theophilus Trent is a young schoolmaster from the East, who settles in North-western Michigan in its early days. His experience as the principal of the Bodkins Institution is extremely amusing and also full of information. Theophilus' courtship, marriage, and wedding-tour are pleasing episodes in the narrative, and we only take leave of him when ill-health forces him to return to the East and forever take leave of Oak Openings. Scenes from early life in the settlements give a special interest to the story.

The author of this volume is one of Iceland's most eminent poets of recent times; he is extremely popular with all classes and extensively read. "Sigrid," though a prose novel, carries out his reputation as a poet; its theme is delicately handled, and its descriptions rich in word-painting. Sigrid is a little shepherd-girl, who has her love affair, which promises for a time to be most unhappy. Both the town-life and country-life of the Icelandic people are sketched, with their different ways of thinking, modes of living, and common intercourse.

THE RAG CASE.

THE publishers, and the public also, are, or should be, eagerly interested in the trial which has been in progress for a fortnight past in regard to the disinfecting of rags. The basis of the trial is the claim that, taking advantage of a popular fear of cholera infection by means of imported rags, which fear the parties in interest had more or less promoted, the health officer at this port and other persons concerned in, or having influence with, the powers of national and state quarantine, "put up a job" to turn an un-honest penny by compelling rag importers to pay tribute to the proprietors of a disinfecting process into whose hands they were playing. As the facts are now before a court at law, it is scarcely proper to pass verdict on them by "newspaper trial." But it is proper to point out how the wheels of commerce can be put out of gear by incompetent and dishonest officials, and how important, practically, it is that business men should do all that they can to promote the appointment or election of honest ones and the peremptory disposal of dishonest ones. The general complaint of those most competent to know was that disinfection in most of the cases in which it was forced was quite unnecessary; that the process designated spoiled a good part of the rags; that the result was to increase the cost of paper stock, and, finally, that the entire business of publishing and printing was threatened with serious disarrangement by this small manifestation of official corruption. We trust this case will be fought out to the end, and guilty parties punished in person as well as by pecuniary loss.

It is gratifying to note that, so shortly after the discussion of the decline of the ugly quarto reprints and their equally objectionable paper-bound sixteenmo progeny, a reaction has begun in the right direction and that at last there appears on the horizon of readers the forerunner of honestlymade and cheap literature. We refer more particularly to the issues in the department of fiction. Such books, for instance, as "Baldine," "Jess," "The Woodlanders," and others recently published by Harper & Bros., all excellent literature by standard authors, are books that are books sold at a moderate price. Handy in shape; set in readable type, carefully printed on substantial white paper, with black not muddy ink-and. above all, daintily bound in cloth with paper sides, these are volumes that are not only an intellectual feast, but decidedly pleasing to the eye. Books that can and will be preserved, and that will have more influence in cultivating a taste for good literature than a whole year's issue of the so-called "cheap" literature. The half-bound novels issued by the J. B. Lippincott Company also are in the right direction, and so, for that matter, are the neat paper editions published by the Appletons and Charles Scribner's Sons. We were never afraid that the poor trash would hold out forever, and only regret that it has been deferred to so long by those who especially had it in their power to head it off at once.

WORCESTER'S DICTIONARY AND ITS PUBLISHERS.

THE J. B. Lippincott Company have once more given evidence in the recent publication of the new improved edition of "Worcester's Unabridged Dictionary," that they wish to be aut Casar aut nullus. Certainly, whatever one's opinion or prejudice may be, it cannot be denied that they have succeeded in making a prodigiously fine volume of that compendious lexicographical work. As to the quality; merits, and standing of this work, these have been too long fixed and approved by the great literary minds of the English-speaking world to need any tribute of ours. We will therefore confine ourselves to pointing out some of the differences of the first and last issues.

In 1860 there appeared in Boston, with the imprint of Hickling, Swan & Brewer, an illustrated royal quarto volume of over 1800 pages, entitled "A Dictionary of the English Language," by Joseph Emerson Worcester LL.D. The volume had been printed by H. O. Houghton & Co., then as now ranking among the best printers of the country, and at once attracted attention by its neat typography and beautiful presswork. The author, a son of Jesse Worcester (well known by his contributions to the press), a graduate of Yale, had already achieved an enviable reputation as a lexicographer. His gazetteers and dictionaries had from the start been commended for completeness and perspicuity. This new work was formed on a plan similar to that of his "Universal and Critical Dictionary of the English Language," poblished in 1846, but was much larger and more comprehensive. Assisted by Messrs. R. Soule, Jr. W. A. Wheeler, Loomis J. Campbell, W.

Drew, Joseph H. Abbott, and John S. Dwight, the author gathered about 104,000 words, for almost all of which authorities were given.

In 1876 J. B. Lippincott & Co., who had for years been the publishers of the Webster dictionaries, began to turn their attention to his great rival. This resulted in their purchase during the centennial year from Brewer & Tilleston of the entire rights in Worcester's Dictionaries. Under their management the magnum opus began a new life. It was enriched by several attractive features and the addition of a large number of new words.

The edition of 1887 includes additions of great importance. They consist of a new "Pronouncing Dictionary of Biography," embracing the names of nearly ten thousand persons of all ages and countries; and a "Pronouncing Gazetteer of the World," embracing the names of over twenty thousand places of all countries. The volume also contains a supplement giving over 12,500 new words and entries, and a vocabulary of synonyms of words in general use. Colored plates of the arms and flags of various nations have also been added. The typography and manufacture of the book have been kept up to a high standard of excellence. The trade have shown their appreciation of the new edition by sending in very liberal orders.

In connection with the foregoing it may be of interest to our readers to present a condensed sketch from Lippincott's Magasine (with accompanying illustration) giving a somewhat impressive representation of the great industrial establishment of the J. B. Lippincott Company, which in its reorganized form, now just entering upon the third year of its existence as a joint-stock company, shows abundant evidence of possessing all the old-time vitality and enterprise that in years past rendered the concern of which this is the outgrowth so famous.

Following the steps of the ingenious artist of our illustration in his progress through the different departments of the establishment, our course leads us first to a subterranean region under the Filbert Street front of the building, where a grimy Guebre, by the aid of powerful boilers, engines, and electric-light plants, dispenses heat, light, and motive-power to the different rooms of the concern. A few steps upward and we come to the basement floor of the establishment, three hundred and sixty-five by forty-five feet in extent, divided into various sections for some of the heavier operations of the business, such as the receipt of goods from abroad, the packing and shipping from the jobbing and publication departments, and at times the package-delivery of the sales at retail. Here also are arranged, on shelves appropriately labelled, stores of the current school-books of the different publishers of the United States, with much miscellaneous stock of paper-bound books and other of the less expen-Fifty incandescent electric lights, supplemented by twice that number of gas-burners, illuminate this wareroom. Easy flights of stairs lead from this basement to the first floor proper, which is the chief attraction for strangers as well as for persons engaged in the trade. The spacious front store, extending nearly two hundred feet from the Market Street doors to the offices near the centre of the whole area, is largely devoted to the retail and jobbing departments. Books in all styles of binding and at all prices here greet the eye, from the twenty-five-cent ephemera of the cheap Libraries to elegantlybound standard works, often of choice editions. A bird's-eye view of the stock packed upon the shelves and counters requires all the ocular power of a far-sighted person, and to mention the name of a book not to be found here would not be an easy thing for a bibliomaniac to do. The store itself is a model cf beauty and convenience, and the books are arranged in a manner to attract the eye even of the casual observer.

The offices and counting-room occupy a space midway between the Market Street and Filbert Street fronts, and here are concocted those brainy schemes that maintain the establishment in the first rank of the publishing business.

Passing the counting-room towards the Filbert Street front, we meet the working bureaus of the Publication and Book-Importing Departments, surrounded by the thousands of volumes which emanate from the presses of this concern and of their foreign correspondents. Here, too, at the Filbert Street front, are located the Educational Department and the Advertising Bureau of the concern, and here at the elevator are received the tons on tons of paper, imported sheets, and other heavy freights. Flights of stairs from this point lead to the several rooms of the manufacturing department, one above the other, "like Ossa piled on Pelion," until we reach the seventh floor from the sub-basement. First, on the second floor, we come to the home of Lippincott's Magazine, occupying a room some twenty-five by one hundred and fifty feet in extent, opposite and above which are situated the book- and job-printing offices of the concern, perhaps the most thoroughly equipped rooms of the kind in the country. Here, besides the production of the choicest specimens of the printer's art (of which a specialty is made), are printed and distributed to subscribers, in addition to Lippincott's Magazine and the wellknown Medical Times, several other periodicals, such as The Therapeutic Gazette, The Pennsylvania Magazine (for the Historical Society of Pennsylvania), The Church Magazine, Archives of Pediatrics, The American Naturalist, The American fournal, etc. Some thirty printingpresses and, at times, a hundred and fifty or more hands are employed in these rooms. From the printing-office the sheets are carried by elevators to the sixth story for drying and binding proper.

Other departments of this mammoth concern are the blank-book manufactory and stock-room, located respectively on the third and second floors. A room some fifty feet by one hundred, where can be found everything in the blank-book way, from the simple every-day "passbook" to the most elaborate bank ledger, affords the best of facilities for the purchaser to select his stock. Convenient bridge-like passages, connect these manufacturing rooms with the Stationery Department at the Market Street front of the concern, where, in spacious rooms, one above the other, is exhibited one of the most extensive stocks in stationery and cognate lines to be found in the United States. Heavy importations direct from France, Germany, and the British Dominions unite with the still more extensive purchases from domestic manufacturers to make it possible for customer to procure here anything that he may require in the lines represented. A selection of these goods may be conveniently found at the stationery counter in the retail department on the first floor, near the Market Street entrance to the . store.

BY GEORGE HAVEN PUTNAM.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED APRIL 2, 1887, BEFORE THE LIBRARY SCHOOL OF COLUMBIA COLLEGE.

H

It is in England that the nature and basis of copyright have received the most thorough consideration, and the English opinions (although representing very wide differences among themselves) have been the most important contributions to the discussion of the subject. It is sufficient to note here that the first record in England of the recognition of property in literature appears in 1558 (that is, half a century later than in France or Germany) when the earliest entry of titles was made on the register of the Company of Stationers in London.

Prior to 1710 there was no legislation creating literary property or confining ownership, nor any abridging its perpetuity or restricting its enjoyment. It was understood, therefore, to owe its existence to common law, and this conclusion, arrived at by the weightiest authorities, remained practically unquestioned until 1774. The discussions which arose in 1769 and 1774, in connection with certain famous cases, concerning the full bearing of the copyright act of 1710 were too technical in their character to be considered in full in such a paper as this.

It is in order, however, to present a brief extract from the opinion of Lord Mansfield, given in 1769 in the case of "Millar vs. Taylor" (a case which was due to an unauthorized reprinting of Thomson's "Seasons"), this opinion possessing special importance as the most weighty declaration in favor of the position that copyright exists at common law, and should properly, therefore, no more be limited to a term of years than should any other class of property. "From what source (he asks) " is the common law drawn which is ad-.mitted to be so clear in respect of the 'copy' (that is the ownership) before publication? From this argument: Because it is just that an author should reap the pecuniary profits of his own ingenuity and labor. It is just that another should not use his name without his consent. It is fit that he should judge when to publish. It is fit that he should not only choose the time, but the manner of publication, how many, what volumes, what print. It is fit that he should choose to whose care he will trust the accuracy and correctness of the impression, to whose honesty he will confide not to foist in additions, etc. . . . and these same reasons hold after the author has published." regard to the copyright statute of 1710, Mansfield

"It is impossible to imply this act into an abolition of the common law right, if such right did exist; or into a declaration that no such right ever existed. . . . Had there been the least intention to take or declare away every pretence of right at the common law, such intention would have been expressly enacted; there must have been a new preamble, totally different from that which now stands."

The opposing opinion was given by Justice Yates, who argued that there could be no property in intellectual productions; that the sole right of an author to the copy of his published works was unknown in England before the statute of Anne; and that copyright was a limited monopoly created and wholly regulated by the act.

This was the view that finally prevailed, and in 1774, the highest judicial authority of Great Britain decided (notwithstanding the weighty dissent of Lord Mansfield) that copyright in Great Britain had not merely been defined by statute, but was practically the creation of statute. It is under that decision, which has been followed by the courts in this country, that the control by English and American authors of their literary productions, instead of being left on a par with that exercised by other classes of producers, has been limited to the terms of years conceded by the copyright acts of their respective governments.

In the United States, the first act in regard to copyright was passed in Connecticut in January, 1783. This was followed by the Massachusetts act of March of the same year, that of Virginia in 1785, and New York and New Jersey in 1786. These acts were due principally to the efforts of Noah Webster, who journeyed from State Capital to State Capital to urge the matter upon the attention of Governors and Legislatures, and their first application was for the protection of the famous Speller.

The necessity for state laws on the subject was, however, obviated by the United States statute of 1790, finally replaced by the act of 1870 now in force.

According to English precedent, copyright cannot exist in a work of libellous, immoral, obscene, or irreligious tendency. There is no record, however, in the United States, of a case in which the question of copyright in irreligious books has been considered. The uniform construction of the law relating to blasphemy is evidence of the large freedom of inquiry and discussion allowed in religious matters. Justice Cooley took the ground that it does not follow because blasphemy is punishable as a crime, that therefore one is not at liberty to dispute and argue against the truth of the Christian religion or of any accepted dogma. Its "divine origin and truth" are not so far admitted in the law as to preclude their being controverted. To forbid discussions on this subject, except by the various sects of believers, would be to abridge the liberty of speech and of the press on a point which, with many, would be regarded as the most important of all. Justice Story delivered a similar opinion, and it is the conclusion of Drone that there appears to be no good reason why valid copyright will not rest in a publication in which are denied any or all of the doctrines of the Bible: provided the motives and manner of the author be such as not to warrant the finding of a case of blasphemy or immorality.

Several of the questions concerning the status and the defence of literary property in this country are only now beginning to come into discussion. The literature of the country is still so young, that as yet but a small portion of it has survived the statute term of copyright (28 or 42 years). From the present time, however, as the terms of works which have established a position as classics, begin in part to expire, we can look forward to a larger number of issues and suits connected with alleged infringements.

During the past few years, several questions of importance for authors and for the reading public have already been passed upon by the courts. One of these cases which bears upon a point of some general interest, it may not be out of place to cite here:

In 1881 an action was brought in the Supreme Court of this State by the representatives of the copyrights of Washington Irving to restrain certain defendants from continuing to sell, under the designation of "Irving's Works," some fragmentary and unrevised portions of Irving's writings, the copyrights of which had expired. The plaintiff had for a number of years used this title of "Irving's Works" to describe the authorized, complete, and revised writings of this author, in the shape in which he had finally prepared them for posterity. The plaintiff sought to enjoin the sale, under the above title, of the fragmentary work, on the several grounds, that it misled the public, caused injury to the literary reputation of the author, and interfered with the property rights of the author's heirs.

The Court decided, however, that as long as the volumes in question contained nothing but material which had actually been written by Irving, it was not unlawful to designate them as "Irving's Works," even though the writings should not be in their complete or final form; and though such term of "Irving's Works" had for years been associated with very different material. The claim for an injunction was therefore denied. The question involved was, it will be noted, one not of copyright, but of trade-mark, and the effect of the decision is that an author's name, combined with the term "Works," does not constitute a "trade-mark." Under this ruling, it might be in order to require that the title-pages of volumes of fragments, offered for sale as " Works," " Caveat should bear the caution emptor "-Let the buyer beware. If authors consider it important to control the final form in which their writings shall be offered to the public or left for posterity, they must secure some addition to the present law on the subject.

The four theories of literary property which have resulted from the discussion of the last 100 years are thus summarized by Drone:

1. That intellectual productions constitute a species of property in natural law, recognized by the common law, and neither lost by publication nor taken away by legislation.

2. That an author has, by common law, an exclusive right to control his works before, but not after publication.

3. That this right is not lost by publication, but has been destroyed by statute.

4. That copyright is a monopoly of limited duration, created and wholly regulated by the legislature, and that an author has, therefore, no other title to his published works than that given by the statute.

Authors have almost from the beginning taken the position that literary property is the highest kind of property in existence; that no right or title to a thing can be so perfect as that which is created by a man's own labor and invention; that the exclusive right of a man to his literary productions and to the use of them for his own profit is as entire and perfect as the faculties employed and labor bestowed are entirely and perfectly his own. "If this claim be accepted," says Noah Webster, "it is difficult to understand on what logical principle a legislature or court can determine that an author enjoys only a temporary property in his own productions." If a man's right to his own property in writing is as perfect as to the productions of his farm or his shop, how can the former be abridged or limited, while Why do the latter is held without limitation? the productions of manual labor reach higher in the scale of right of property than the production of the intellect? It is the case, however, that notwithstanding the logic of this position, no nation to-day accords copyright for more than a limited term, of which the longest is eighty years and the shortest fifteen. In the only countries in which the experiment of perpetual copyright has been attempted, Holland, Belgium, Sweden, and Denmark, a return was speedily made to protection for a term of years. There appears to have been always apprehension on the part of the public and the governments lest an indefinite copyright might result in the accumulation in the hands of traders of "literary monopolies," under which extortionate prices would be demanded from successive generations for the higher, and most necessary productions of national literature. It is hardly practicable to estimate how well founded such apprehensions may be, as no opportunities have as yet existed for the development of such monopolies. It seems probable that accumulations of literary property would, as in the case of other property, be so far regulated by the laws of supply and demand as not to become detrimental to the interests of the community. If a popular demand existed or could be created for an article, it would doubtless be produced and supplied at the lowest price that would secure the widest popular sale. If the article was suited for but a limited demand, the price, to remunerate the producer and owner, would be proportionately higher. A further consideration obtains, however, in connection with literary property, which has also had influence in the framing of copyright laws. The possibility exists that the descendants of an author who have become by inheritance the owners of his copyright, might, for one cause or another, desire to withdraw the works from circulation. A case could even occur in which parties interested in suppressing certain works, might possess themselves of the copyright for this special purpose. The heirs of Calvin, if converted to Romanism, might very naturally have desired to suppress the circulation of the "Institutes;" and the history of literature affords, of course, hundreds of instances in which there would have been sufficient motives for suppressing by any means which the nature of copyrights might render possible, works that had been once given to the world. It will, doubtless, be admitted that, in this class of cases, the development of literature and freedom of thought would alike demand the exercise of the authority of government on behalf of the community to insure the continued existence of works in which the community possessed any continued interest.

With the single exception of China, all nations possessing a literature are, as we have noted, now in accord as to the equity and the necessity of protecting the property rights of their authors, and have recognized these rights by copyright enactments giving to authors the control of their works for terms ranging from fifteen years (in Greece) to the life of the author and fifty years thereafter (in Russia) and the tendency from decade to decade has been steadily towards a larger recognition of the author's claims and a lengthening of the terms of his copyright. It is beginning to be admitted that if an author may, like other producers, be permitted to do work for the benefit of his children, there is no logical ground for preventing him from doing further work in behalf of his grandchildren.

All nations which both produce literature and make use of the literature of others, with one exception only, are also in accord in the position that if literary property is to be recognized and defended at all, there is no propriety in limiting such recognition by political boundaries. They have, therefore, arrived at international arrangements under which authors are secured some returns from all their readers, foreign as well as domestic.

Such an international comity is what we should naturally expect to find at this stage of the world's civilization. What we should not expect to find is for the single exception to this world's comity to be presented by the nation which makes, perhaps, the largest claims to enlightenment, general intelligence, and popular education; which possesses a great national literature of its own, and which indulges in the widest possible use of the literature of other nations-our own United States. "Prisoner at the bar," said a Western judge, "you have had a Christian bringing up and a college education, instead of which you go about the country stealing ducks." In like manner some international authority might say to us delinquent Americans: "You have had a Christian bringing up and an education in the common principles of morality, instead of which you go about the world of literature stealing books.

From the Gentleman's Magazine.

In following the sale of the famous Seillière library, the conviction is forced upon one that the price of books, qua books, is diminishing. Reprinting in fac-simile, the multiplication of handsome editions of works once almost inaccessible, and other similar causes explain this. Twoscore years ago, to obtain a poetical work of Wither or a play of Heywood, it was necessary to purchase an original edition. The same held true of such curious French works as form portions of what is known as the Shandean Library, "Les Pensées," etc.; "De Bruscambille," "Les Bigarrures et Touches du Seigneur des Accords, etc. These books have one and all been reprinted, and the old editions, even when in fine condition, fetch prices much lower than were at one time paid for them. The French public, meantime, seem content to collect the early works of romanticists, or works with the illustrations of engravers from Gravelot to Gavarni. Taking, accordingly, the average prices realized in the Seillière sale, they were 20 to 30 per cent. lower than those of the great sales of the previous generation. Unique books, which are more interesting as art specimens than as books, Livres d'heures, incunables of a certain description, the rarest Elzevirs and Aldines, are well in demand. Some books, moreover, in historic bindings are much sought. A fine binding, Grolier or other, recommends a book more than almost anything else. It was curious to see a fine Froissart by Nic. Verard, in four folio volumes, go for £100, while a tract of a dozen pages, with the Grolier device, fetched twice the sum. In Paris, meanwhile, at the same time the Seillière was going on, a first edition of the collective works of Racine was being sold for 679f., while Laborde's "Choix de Chansons" fetched 1640f., and "Les Amours de Daphnis et Chloé" 900f.

THE BOSTON CLUB FOR AUTHORS.

From the N. Y. Times.

The formation of an Authors' Club in Boston rouses the same brood of misconceptions which awoke at the founding of the Authors' Club of New York five years ago. Invitations to meet for discussion were signed by Messrs. Holmes, Lowell, Howells, Aldrich, Percival Lowell, Bernard Carpenter, A. P. Brown, and Arthur W. Eaton, and were sent to a limited number of writers. One paper has already criticised the invitation because it bears several names not known. But an author is a person known. Ergo, some of these gentlemen are not authors, and the thing is absurd.

Special clubs for men of letters are not founded for a whim, but have special needs behind them. In London the Incorporated Society of Authors is frankly a guild established to protect and forward the rights and interests of writers; but in New York and presumably in Boston the club is only meant to form a place of meeting for men of letters, where they can entertain their friends and get to know each other without ceremony and loss of precious time. Should combined action on the part of writers be necessary, however, the club has already performed the most difficult part of the matter, that of uniting the men of the same guild, and performed it in the best possible way, easily, naturally, without friction; moreover, it has permitted the members to form some judgment concerning the capacity of their fellows in matters requiring action. usefulness of an Authors' Club was felt in New York when the Copyright League was started. Had the Authors' Club undertaken to do what the league attempted, it would not have come so But the league found at hand in near success. the club all the material it wanted, so far as the literary men were concerned, yet was able to embrace a wide circle of citizens in other professions, and thus gain strength from all sides. It went far toward proving the wisdom of establishing the club as a social factor rather than an organization with aggressive purposes and an object.

The Boston club is likely to pursue the same course, since five of the eight signers of the invitation are or have been members of the club They will excite the same adverse criticism for accepting as members some who are not known as authors and failing to invite others who are, to all appearance, eligible. But special clubs could not exist if the members were forced to take in all of their particular guild who are technically fit and keep out all who do not exactly fill the requirements. Of the former some are obnoxious for one reason or another, and their entrance would defeat the purposes of the organization. Of the latter there are cases which compel a relaxation of the rules. For example, the New York club is said to be indulgent on the point of a printed volume, if the person who has not yet shown his name on the title-page of a book is a young man who in other respects exhibits the signs of a literary temperament and intends to become an author. Manifestly it would be foolish to adhere too strictly to cast-iron rules; the main point is to keep the club as near as possible to the guild, while striving to encourage the clever young men and to honor in all dignified ways the veterans of the profession.

The Boston club will therefore not so much copy the New York club as naturally assume the same shape, because it is the growth of exactly the same circumstances. According to local papers, it will have no President, the Executive Committee appointing a Secretary and Treasurer. The meetings will be held once a fortnight, presumably with invited guests. The need of such a club must exist, for the Bostonians are already wondering how it is that one did not exist long ago in such a centre of book-writers and book-readers.

Everything nowadays tends to the examination of obscure matters like the relations between author and publisher. The first step toward a position fair to both the parties to the production of a book was taken in 1882 with the foundation of the Authors' Club. The next advance was the Incorporated Society of Authors in London, an organization which has already joined battle with the publishers, let us hope in no unfriendly spirit. Now Boston falls into line, and perhaps it is reserved for Yankee ingenuity to devise some arrangement whereby, on the one hand, the publisher shall be relieved of the odium of concealing his accounts, and, on the other, the author shall benefit by any increase in the sale of his book-whereby the risks of the publisher shall be reduced to a minimum, and the profits of the author carried to their highest mark.

THE PROFITS OF PUBLISHING.

Robert J. Burdette, in the Brooklyn Eagle.

WE have just been reading about the distribution of the profits on a $1.50 book. On the first thousand, the stereotyper loses six cents per copy, the publisher loses eighteen cents, the author loses ten cents, the printer loses his time, and the reader loses his patience. You see there isn't really very much made on the first thousand; the profits develop more fully on the succeeding thousands. Suppose, for instance, you decide to publish an edition of five thousand; you lose one hundred dollars on the first thousand. Then you change your mind and don't publish the other four thousand. You make four hundred dollars on them, a clear profit of three hundred net. You can't see it? Well, don't you ever publish a book, then, that's all; you haven't the real author's instinct; you have no genius.

UNCLE SAM'S BOOKCASE.

IN an interesting article on the Congressional Library in the April Cosmopolitan, Frank G. Carpenter says:

"It contains 560,000 bound volumes, 200,000 pamphlets, and 350,000 sheets of music, and it has tens of thousands of works on art, maps, and photographs. Its annual increase from copyright alone amounts to from 20,000 to 30,000 volumes. It is the great brain-reserver of the United States. It contains a complete index of the workings of the American mind. Everything in literature, music, or art that is copyrighted, must be deposited in it, and the brain reels in attempting to conceive how many lives of intellectual workers are packed away upon its shelves.

"In company with one of its librarians I lately took a walk through its various parts, and spent nearly a half-day winding in and out through aisle after aisle, and wall after wall of books, picking my way between great stacks of valumes, and entering room after room which the eyes of the ordinary visitor never see. The National Library is at the water and the sands of volumes have long since overflowed its capacity, until now every available inch of space is utilized, and every room in the vicinity is stacked with books.

"The very floors of the library are piled up with overflow, and the shelves seem almost bursting with their tightly-packed contents. library proper, which is also the reading-room, consists of a long, hall-like room with wings at each end jutting off like the head of a T. reading-room is ninety-one feet long, thirty-four feet wide, and thirty-four feet high. Its walls are made up of rectangular alcoves, each about the size of a small hall bed-room, and shut off from the room by a door of iron lattice-work. The walls of these alcoves are filled with books, and there are three galleries of them rising one above another. In the front of the upper galleries are balustrades, and these have also been lined on the inside with book-shelves, so that as you walk along the narrow galleries you almost graze the books on either side.

"The wings at the ends are fitted up with similar alcoves, and the whole looks like an immense bee-hive, with hundreds of cells, of as many colors as you will find in bookbindings. The visitors are the bees. They are not allowed, however, to go into these alcove cells, and the reading in the library is done at tables on the lower floor of the main room and of its wings. The library is almost always full of readers, and on Saturdays the crowd is so great that many do their reading while standing."

NOTES ON AUTHORS.

MR. GUTHRIE—"F. Anstey"—has joined the staff of Punch.

MR. MAX O'RELL will begin a lecturing tour in the United States in October next.

STEPNIAK has nearly completed a work entitled "Russian Peasantry," to be published by Swan Sonnenschein & Co.

"PLEASURES of Life" is the title of a volume of essays by Sir John Lubbock, to be published soon by Macmillan & Co.

MR. CABOT and Mr. Coghill are said to be the authors of the lately published novel, "Two Gentlemen of Gotham."

SIR HENRY LAYARD is preparing for the press "Early Adventures in Persia, Susiana, and Babylonia," to be published by Murray.

MR. STEDMAN is at work on a supplement to his "Victorian Poets" which will be added to the thirteenth edition that is to appear at the end of the year.

RICHARD A. PROCTOR says that everything he has yet published has merely indicated the course his studies have taken; and these studies he hopes to embody in a treatise on astronomy now nearly a quarter of a century in preparation.

PROF. FAIRCHILD announces that his "History of the New York Academy of Sciences" will be delivered to subscribers about the 1st of May. The volume is an octavo of 200 pages, with 27 portraits and 7 views of buildings. Five hundred copies are printed.

tering room after room which the eyes of the ordinary visitor never see. The National Library is at the west end of the great Capitol. Its thoubranch of Quakers. It is a labor of love. Hicks, like Whitman, was a native of Brooklyn, and Walt remembers, when ten years of age, to have heard him preach. Elias Hicks is one of the most striking of American figures—a sort of mystical and eloquent Thomas Paine. Whitman is said to have gathered many curious anecdotes concerning this singularly neglected personage, and his biography, which will probably be preceded by a paper in Lippincott's Magazine, will be of historic interest.

BUSINESS NOTES.

NEW YORK CITY.—E. A. Mac, of the N. Y. Information Co., has removed to 109 East 9th St. He proposes shortly to reorganize the methods of the Information Company. He will continue to buy for the trade and public and private libraries, and continue the work of furnishing compilations of the most complete and reliable information on special subjects. Mr. Mac's experience thus far has been that while there are many who would like the whole earth sent them gratuitously in reply to a postal card, there are many more who are quite glad to pay liberally for good service, and that it only needs a genius to sift the one from the other to secure a good run of custom.

VICKSBURG, MISS.—F. C. Baum has purchased the book, stationery, and notion department of the late firm known as "The People's Book and Music Store," and will continue the business, carrying a large and more varied stock than ever before, comprising miscellaneous, school, and blank books, plain and fancy writing papers, sheet music and small musical instruments, picture frames, etc.

JOURNALISTIC NOTES.

GEN. SHERMAN will notice in the May number of the North American Review Lord Wolseley's estimate of Gen. Lee recently published in Macmillan's Magazine.

MR. W. D. Howells has prepared for the Youth's Companion an autobiographical sketch of his boyhood life in Ohio. It is called "A Year in a Log-Cabin," and will be published, with several illustrations, complete, in the issue of the Companion for May 12.

NOTES ON CATALOGUES.

MACMILIAN & Co. have published a supplement to their catalogue of new books issued last fall. (16 p., 8°.)

E. & F. N. Sion, 35 Murray St., N. Y., have issued an excellent catalogue of their publications relating to civil and mechanical engineering, arts, trades, and manufactures. (116 p., 16°.)

E. L. Kellogg & Co., N. Y., have published a list of 525 "Books for Young People," classified into eight departments—Biography, American history, General history and historical stories, Travels, Exploration and adventures. Natural history, Light science, Fairy tales, legends, mythology, General stories. The age of reader to whom the book is adapted is also indicated. The list will be found a convenient guide to those who select books for school libraries. (20 p., 16°, gratis.)

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

Bosron has a new club called "The Odd Volumes" (probably after a London prototype), and composed of literary men who have the hobby of collecting rare books, mss., prints, etc.

THOMAS WHITTAKER will issue on May 2 two volumes in the Theological Educator series, Prof. Warfiele's "Introduction to the Textual Criticism of the New Testament" and the Rev. W. H. Lowe's "Hebrew Grammar."

ARNOLD & Co., Philadelphia, have just published a little volume by Mrs. Rorer, devoted to directions for canning and preserving, with recipes for various methods for pickling, making catsups, fruit butters, marmaludes, etc.

J. H. HUBBELL & Co., N. Y., have just issued the first annual volume of the Bankers' Directory. It contains a full list of the banks and bankers of the United States and Great Britain, and a synopsis of the banking laws of all the States.

JAMES E. MUNSON cautions publishers and booksellers against publishing or selling any text-book of his system of phonography, or modification of the same, unless authorized by him, as it would be in violation of his copyright, which he will protect.

D. C. HEATH & Co. will publish next week "Phosphorus Hollunder," a novel by L. v. François, edited by Dr. Oscar Faulhaber, of Phillips Exeter Academy; also "Easy Training of Children," by Mrs. Frank Malleson, a book for mothers and teachers.

WE desire to call the attention of the trade to the fact that by a typographical error the price of "Sweet Cicely" was given incorrectly as $1 in Funk & Wagnall's advertisement, on page 473 of the PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY, April 2. The price is $2, as given in their advertisement in this issue on page 574.

GINN & Co. have ready this week "Little Flower People," by Gertude Elizabeth Hale, an interesting elementary work on flowers designed to awaken an interest in plant life among the youngest readers; also "Outlines of Logic," by Herman Lotze, translated and edited by Prof. George T. Ladd, of Yale College.

MR. WM. CUSHING, we are sorry to learn, has been obliged to give up the publication of his proposed "Anonyms" as a companion to his "Pseudonyms." This is to be regretted as a loss to American bibliography. There ought to be enough public-spirited institutions and individuals—booksellers and librarians—to whom such a work is an almost daily necessity, to offer Mr. Cushing and his publishers a guarantee against loss in completing a work so admirably begun.

With the publication of the third volume of the history of Central America, now about ready to place in the hands of subscribers, but fourteen of the thirty-nine volumes of Hubert Howe Bancroft's works remain unpublished. The History Company are gratified with the success that has attended the enterprise thus far, the growing favor in which each successive volume is held by the public, and the especially kind notices and reviews of the press generally prove a very great encouragement.

THE third and final volume (for this year) of the Dunlap Society is Mr. Laurence Hutton's admirably annotated "Opening Addresses, written for and delivered at the first performances in many American theatres, from Boston to San Francisco, A.D. 1752–1880." There are more than forty of these addresses, and they are of very varying literary value, but of most indubitable interest. The frontispiece of the collection, as has already been noted, is a fac-simile, printed in blue, of a blue-china plate giving a view of the old Park Theatre.

HENRY ALTEMUS, Philadelphia Bible Ware-house, 507-513 Cherry St., Philadelphia, announce that they are making many additions to their large and attractive line of photograph albums. The house has been long well known for the beauty and originality of their styles, and will no doubt, as heretofore, command the full share of the trade during the coming season. Increasing sales indicate the favor accorded their line of family, pulpit, and reference Bibles. They have now ready a full catalogue, which they will send to dealers on application.

MR. G. A. WHITTAKER, who for nearly twenty years past has been favorably known as one of the leading booksellers and stationers of Washington, has been appointed special agent of Public Opinion, with headquarters at 140 Nassau St., New York City. He will have special charge of the advertisements of publishers and the Literary and Book Department, Public Opinion has completed its first year, and has proven quite successful. The idea of a weekly publication which should present, in convenient, intelligible form, the leading expressions of opinion on current topics, has been carried out with notable energy, tact, and intelligence.

FRANK M. Scott, the trusted cashier and book-keeper of C. L. Webster & Co., was sentenced to six years in the N. Y. State Prison. He continued a series of embezzlements for a year and a half, stealing in all $26,000 from the firm. He had pleaded guilty to grand larceny in the first degree and District-Attorney Martine recommended to Judge Gildersleeve that the punishment be near the lowest term of imprisonment allowed under the plea—five years. He said that Scott had made restitution as far as possible, having conveyed property valued at $8000 to the firm. He consented to being brought to New York from New Jersey without a requisition and confessed all his guilty acts.

G. P. Putnam's Sons announce that when they have completed the publication of their edition of Franklin's works, of which the third volume is about to be delivered to subscribers, they will follow this with an edition of the "Writings of Washington," printed in similar style. The set, which will probably be comprised in twelve volumes, will contain the diaries, the addresses, and the correspondence, and will include a number of papers not before printed. Arrangements for the editing have been in train for some months, and the name of the editor will be announced shortly. The limited edition printed of the "Franklin's Works" is now all subscribed for, and the price of sets has already appreciated, as was the case with the "Hamilton."

ROBERTS BROS. will issue immediately "Button's Inn," a new novel by Judge A. W. Tourgée, who has again brought the knowledge of local history which gave us such novels as "Figs and Thistles" and "Hot Plowshares" to bear upon the section of country around Chautauqua and Lake Erie during the years from 1815-1830, just before the stage-coach made way for the locomotive. Time and place furnish the author opportunity to touch upon the history of the emigration of the French settlers around Lake Erie to the faroff shores of the Mississippi, and also to describe the early days of Mormonism, which, unknown to many, may also be traced to this part of our country. They will also issue Joaquin Miller's "Songs of the Mexican Seas," including "The Sea of Fire," and "The Rhyme of the Great River." another volume of distinctly American flavor.

D. LOTHROP Co. have in press "The Romance of a Letter," a story partly located in Boston which introduces many familiar features. The plot is said to be original and ingenious. The heroine, in her determination to fulfil the promise made a dead friend, meets with unexpected difficulties, but bravely accomplishes her purpose. The snow-bound train in the far West is a piece of realistic drawing; and the night at Mt. Washington will bring pleasant recollections to many mountain visitors. Readers will be divided as to the attractions of two lovers, so strongly contrasted; but the denouement is satisfactory. A notable forthcoming book from the press of D. Lothrop Company will be the translation of "The Russian Novelists" from the French of Viscomte E. Me de Vogüé. Written with force, with the marked qualities of the best French writers, a clear insight and a transparent style, and the translation by a Boston lady is exceedingly well done. The book will be issued early this summer.

Another work by the author of "The Life of a Prig" is announced by Kegan Paul, Trench & Co. It is entitled "How to Make a Saint; or, the process of canonization in the Church of England."

GUSTAV FREYTAG'S collected works will make up sixteen volumes. The German critics commend the rare and unaffected modesty with which Freytag speaks of his private affairs and literary successes in his autobiography.

The first two volumes of Sir Richard F. Burton's "Supplemental Nights," which will consist of five volumes in all, are now ready for issue to subscribers. They contain the terminal stories of the Breslau edition, which were translated by Mr. John Payne in three volumes, under the title of "Tales from the Arabic." The three concluding volumes will certainly be issued before the end of the year.

Mr. Edmund Robertson, some time professor of Roman Law at University College, London, and now M.P. for Dundee, according to the London Academy, has written a little book illustrating the burning political question of the day from the point of view of experience acquired during several visits to America. While fully recognizing the broad difference between the two cases, he aims at showing how the relations between the Federal and the several State governments may help towards a solution of the Irish problem. The book will be called "American Home Rule: a sketch of the political system in the United States," and It will be published by A. & C. Black, of Edinburgh

The Summer Catalogue, issued now for ten years, has been found so useful and profitable by enterprising dealers, that it has become a regular feature of the trade. The eleventh issue, in a special pamphlet adapted for imprint circulation all through the summer, will be published in connection with The Publishers' Weekly, early in June.

The imprint editions will contain, in addition to a catalogue of guide-books and light literature for summer reading, an entirely new selection of reading-matter both of a practical and entertaining character, chiefly intended for the use and amusement of tourists, pleasure-seekers, and visitors of summer resorts.

Booksellers should remember that, while summer is usually a dul. time, the sales of light literature, etc., can be pushed to make a successful business even in this season. The c.asses who travel are of course those who have money to spend, even in dull times, and the summer is the time when very many bookbuyers do the greater part of their reading. The tide of travel this year is likely to set toward home resorts, instead of across sea. Booksellers at or near summer resorts should therefore especially avail themselves of this publication, while city dealers should remember that it will be also useful to tempt stay-athomes to make investments or to follow up customers otherwise out of reach.

LET Orders for imprint editions at subscription rates should be sent in at once.

AMERICAN TRADE-MARK CASES.

Several volumes of Trade-mark cases and Trade-mark digests have been published from time to time. The last edition of cases is that of Mr. Rowland Cox, published in 1880, and which contains an abstract of all Trade-mark cases reported down to December, 1879. The last digest is that of Coddington, published in 1878.

The present volume is designed to embrace the field of both of the books above mentioned from the date of their publication to the present time. It will contain a complete report of all the reported cases decided by Courts in the United States, both State and Federal, as well as by the Commissioner of Patents, and the briefs of counsel where such have been obtained.

It will also contain a subject digest of law points decided by the cases published. This volume will be of special value to the legal profession in all parts of the country, because the remedies for infringement of trademarks now at the command of trade-mark owners lie entirely in the Equity Courts, both State and Federal, and arise under the common law, except in a few of the States where trade-mark statutes exist. While the Federal statute was in existence the practice in trade-mark States where trade-mark statutes exist. While the Federal statute was in existence the practice in trade-mark cases was confined to the Federal Courts, and in great measure to attorneys making a specialty of practice in those courts; but at present, with such a volume at hand, any State practitioner may with confidence undertake a trade-mark case. A system of reference from digest to syllabus, and from syllabus to section of opinion, has been adopted in printing these cases, which the editors feel will be of material assistance in using the volume.

The cases collected are gathered from almost every

The cases collected are gathered from almost every State of the Union, and from about one hundred and fifty volumes.

Compiled and edited by Benjamin Price and Arthur Stewart, of the Baltimore Bar. Will make a volume of upwards of 700 pages; will be published in the best Law-Hook style. Price, $7.50. Orders solicited. Edition limited.

HAVE RECENTLY PUBLISHED:

HINTS ON EARLY EDUCATION.

This work was first published sixty years ago in London, anonymously. Its authorship has been attributed to a sister of Elizabeth Fry, the eminent philanthropist; but although it passed through eighteen editions in England, the name of the author never appeared on the title-page. It is very helpful from the practical good sease, clear insight, intelligent discrimination, and high moral standard of the "Hints." zmo, cloth, 60 cents.

Rev. JOHN HALL, D.D., says:

"I have read carefully the 'Hints on Early Education.' The gentle wisdom, knowledge of human nature, and loyalty to 'Our Father in Heaven,' which the writer—unknown to me—displays, commend the book as well worth putting within the reach of American parents. I cannot recall a sentiment that requires modification; nor is there anything in the volume that tends to limit the book to any one class or any one denomination. . . . Under the blessing of God, this modest volume may recall attention to a vital matter, deepen the sense of parental duty, and guide heads and hearts already impressed, and raise the question, How can we best mould the character of these our children? I heartily commend the book."

A DAY IN CAPERNAUM.

By Dr. Franz Delitzsch, Professor in the University of Leipzig. Translated from the third German Edition by Rev. George H. Schodde, Ph.D., Professor in Capital University, Columbus, Ohio. 12mo, cloth, 75 cents.

The description of the localities as they now appear is based, although not exclusively, on the works of Robinson; their reproduction in their older form is based on the notices scattered in Josephus, the Talmud, and the Midrashim, for which the author was not restricted to those already collected by Reland, Lightfoot, Schwarz, and Neubauer. The illustrations of the times and of the life of the people are in nowise the work of fiction; they are throughout drawn from the oldest Jewish literature.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PRAYER-MEETINGS.

By Rev. F. E. CLARK, Pastor of Philip's Church, Boston; founder and originator of "The Society of Christian Endeavor." 12mo, cloth, 75 cents.

Long needed and thoroughly practical. It tells how to conduct these meetings and make them interesting. Full of suggestive hints. Hundreds of themes and texts used in many prayer-meetings.

The Congregationalist, Boston, says: "It is an unusual combination of Christian common-sense with a broad and also minute knowledge of the needs, desires, tastes, and feelings of young people."

Send for descriptive circular.

BEFORE AN AUDIENCE:

Or, The Use of the Will in Public Speaking. By NATHAN SHEPPARD. A splendid book for all public speakers. 12mo, cloth, 75 cents. Send for circular.

The New York Evangelist says: "They are very racy and earnest talks, full of sense and most delightfully dogmatic. The author knocks to flinders the theories of elocutionists, and opposes all their rules with one simple counsel, 'Wake up your will.'"

NEW EDITION IN PRESS.

CAPTAIN OF THE JANIZARIES.

By JAMES M. LUDLOW, M.D. A historic novel of great value. It is both a medel of romance and a standard history. Cloth, $1.50.

The Atlanta Constitution says: "The events move in a dazzling procession, with raids, battles, and intrigues, culminating in the capture of Constantinople, which is described with lurid power."

The New York Critic says: "Stirring, vivid, and impressive, and brilliantly written."

NOTES IN SEASON.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & Co. publish to-day in the American Commonwealths series Prof. Alexander Johnston's history of Connecticut.

D. APPLETON & Co. will publish shortly "Round About to Moscow," an epicurean journey, by John Bell Bouton. This is described as "the record of a tour made, American fashion, with due regard for comfort and luxury," and as "a vindication of Russia from those unfounded and unjust charges of the English press which have so powerfully dissuaded Americans from visiting that country, where they are made so welcome and so good a time awaits them."

THE J. B. LIPPINCOTT Co. will shortly publish an anonymous novel, to be entitled "Wallingford." It is said to be the production of an official of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. The heroine is a Baltimore belle and the hero a civil engineer, who has constructed a tunnel under Baltimore. It is said that the author desires in this work to test his theory that the popular taste demands romantic, sentimental, and broadly humorous things in fiction rather than photographic realism.

TICKNOR & Co. publish to-day "Final Memorials of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow," by Samuel Longfellow, containing the journals and letters of the last twelve years of the poet's life, together with many letters of earlier periods, a chapter of "Table Talk," and some pieces of unpublished verse. It will be issued in one volume. They have also just ready "The Devil's Hat," a novel of the oil regions of Pennsylvania, by Melville Philips, and "Lights and Shadows of a Life," a Southern tale, by Madeleine Vinton Dahlgren.

LEE & SHEPARD will publish on the 15th "Drones' Honey," a novel by Sophie May, which marks a new departure in the writings of this brilliant author, whose previous efforts were specially designed to suit the young. It is a story of society, well conceived in plot, and skilfully developed, full of power and grace. They will also issue on the same day a new edition of "A Few Thoughts for a Young Man," by Horace Mann. They have in preparation new editions of those valuable works, "Milch Cows and Dairy Farming" and "Grasses and Forage Plants," by C. L. Flint, of the Mass. State Board of Agriculture. Both are being carefully revised and brought down to date.

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS will publish shortly in book-form, under the title of " In Ole Virginia, the admirable stories by Mr. Thomas Nelson Page which have been delighting magazine readers for some time. A handsome cover has been designed for the book by the Tiffany Art Company. They will also issue shortly H. C. Bunner's "Story of a New York House," which appeared serially in Scribner's Magazine. Nothing more delightful in tone and artistic in spirit has been produced by an American author in a long time. The vicissitudes of the old house have been graphically described, but the fine quality of the work has been disclosed in the uncommon delicacy of its characterizations. The past has been most skilfully reproduced by a thorough imaginative identification with its ideals and standards, and a fine comprehension of its spirit.

CASSELL & COMPANY have in press a work to be entitled "Pen Portraits of Literary Women." It is to be in two volumes of the size of the Actors and Actresses series. It will comprise, with the exception of George Sand and Harriet Beecher Stowe, concise biographical sketches of English literary women from Hannah More to George Eliot, accompanied by illustrative anecdotes and ana. The work has been prepared by Miss Helen Gray Cone, author of the volume of poems, "Oberon and Puck," and Miss J. L. Gilder, of The Critic. Messrs. Cassell will issue shortly "Sidney Luska's" new novel, entitled "The Yoke of the Thorah." It is the story of a oung Hebrew painter's love for a Christian girl. The scene is laid in New York, and the atmosphere is thoroughly local. Mr. Luska has such a passion for the Jewish race, that it has been said that he belongs to it, but it is stated that he comes from typical American stock, and has not even married among the Hebrews, his wife being of French descent and a devout Roman Catholic

"The purpose of this work is to record the history of the development of the municipal institutions of Philadelphia; to trace, with considerable detail, the many changes in the powers, duties, and position of the mayor; in the election, appointment, and powers of the other executive officers; in the position and relation of the various departments; in the legislative and executive powers of councils; in the frequently shifting distribution of executive power between the mayor and councils; in the procedure of councils, and in the financial system of the city. Such a history is of peculiar interest to students of city. Such a history is of peculiar interest to students of municipal questions, because the development of the government of Philadelphia begins with the most charac-teristic form of a mediæval English borough corporation, and, after passing through almost every system and phase of municipal institutions, ends with a charter embracing the latest ideas of municipal government. The work is based upon the acts of assembly, the city ordinances, the state reports, and many other authorities cited elsewhere."

Judge Brown, who was Mayor of Baltimore in 1861, discusses frankly the events leading to the 19th of April, when the 6th Mass. Regt. marched through Baltimore and was attacked by a furious mob, and also those immediately following. Judge Brown states that his point of view of the events he describes is that of many leading citizens of Maryland. The volume not only aims to be dispassionate and historically accurate, but to bring about a better understanding of the state of society and of public feeling in the borderland between the North and South in 1861.

The story opens in France. Here Isobel Kellinger had lived at a small boarding-school in Havre during almost all the twenty years of her brief life. Isobel is an American girl and the only daughter of a sea-captain. She has never received much love from father or mother, and has grown up a dissatisfied, unhappy girl, yearning for love and a home life. The story illustrates her character, and the changes it undergoes both through trouble and happiness. She returns to America to live with her grandfather, and has many unusual experiences before she finds the happiness she desires. There is a strong element of religious teaching in the story.

The Publishers' Meckly.

FOUNDED BY F. LEYPOLDT.

MAY 7, 1887.

Publishers are requested to furnish title-page proofs and advance information of books forthcoming, both for entry in the lists and for descriptive mention. An early copy of each book published should be forwarded, to insure correctness in the final entry.

The trade are invited to send "Communications" to the editor on any topic of interest to the trade, and as to which an interchange of opinion is desirable. Also, matter for "Notes and Queries" thankfully received.

In case of business changes, notification or card should be immediately sent to this office for entry under "Business Notes." New catalogues issued will also be mentioned when formulated. ed when forwarded.

The editor does not hold himself responsible for the views expressed in contributed articles or communications. All matter, whether for the reading matter columns or our advertising pages, should reach this office not later than Wednesday noon, to insure insertion in the same week's issue.

" Every man is a debtor to his profession, from the which, as men do of course seek to receive countenance and profit, so ought they of duty to endeavor themselves by way of amends to be a help thereunto."-LORD BACON.

ANOTHER PEST FOR PUBLISHERS.

A LITTLE time since, many publishers received from a kind-hearted and enterprising Chicago gentleman a list of "valuable names" which he announced would be charged to the obliged recipient at one dollar in the event of the list not being returned. These were the names of parties who were represented as eager and even anxious to buy goods, and it was explained to innocent publishers that it would be money in their purse to give them opportunity to buy a few hundred books or periodicals.

The other side of the story is shown in the following advertisements, which have been clipped at random from a large number of interesting examples of the same sort:

BOOKS FREE as samples, also hundreds of magazines, papers, works of art, catalogues, circulars, etc., guaranteed to every one sending 25 cents for having name and address published in our Readers' Directory. Issued monthly and used by all the leading publishers, booksellers, manufacturers, and dealers in the United States, Canada, and Great Britain. You will get over $25 worth of choice reading free, besides numerous price lists from those who sell goods by mail. Keep posted on all the new things in literature, and the bargains offered by responsible firms, by having your name inserted at once. Copy containing name free. Mention this paper. Address Popular Critic, 1031 Springer Av., Chicago, Ill.

WE GUARANTEE YOU to receive 500 samples, books, circulars, letters, and papers free from firms all over the U. S. and Canada, if you send 20 cents to have your name in new issue of Agents' Name Directory, Allen & Co., Box 355, Kennedy, N. Y.

WANTED! Everybody to send to cents for the Agents' World four months on trial, and have their names inserted in the Agents' Directory, from which they will receive hundreds of samples, circulars, etc., and piles of good reading-matter free. Agents' World Publishing Co., Passumpsic, Vt.

The price of waste-paper is at present so low that this performance would scarcely seem to hold out prospects of great wealth. Nevertheless there are a good many people, apparently a good many thousand people, up and down the country, who are willing to assist in swindling publishers in this small way. The publisher's lot is not altogether a happy one.

THE termination of the great rag case has been reported in the daily papers, and we give a brief statement of the result elsewhere. The case will undoubtedly be carried to the higher courts, but the present verdict affords good ground for other suits of the same sort, and it is to be hoped, in the interests of commerce and of public morality, that all those who have suffered from the rag ring should take measures to recover as much as possible of their losses and to complete the punishment of the persons concerned in that outrage. Such evils in political administration can only be cured by alert and vigorous action on the part of those who are sufferers. In serving their own cause they serve the cause of the commercial community, and in a trade so intelligent and of such public spirit as the papertrade no stone should be left unturned to point the moral of the present tale in a very practical way.

WE were in error in a recent editorial in stating or implying that Mr. Longfellow was practically his own publisher, and his publishers really selling agents, throughout his literary life. In his earlier years, he made his own plates, as stated, and paid for his own printing, but in the later years, with Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. and their predecessors, the plates were made and owned by the publishers after the usual manner.

COMMUNICATIONS.

CUSHING'S ANONYMS-A CORRECTION,

CAMBRIDGE, May 3, 1887.

To the Editor of the Publishers' Weekly.

DEAR SIR: I see it announced in the Publish-ERS' WEEKLY of last week that I had given up the publication of "Anonyms." This is not by any means the case. To be sure I have not met with the encouragement I expected, but I am making additions every day. I have now nearly if not quite 21,000 titles, and I cannot believe that in the case of a work of such vast importance to libraries the librarians will be so blind to their interests as to let it go unpublished. I shall be glad to receive information from any of your readers in regard to the authorship of any anonymous book or pamphlet.

or pampants,
William Cushing,

LITERARY PROPERTY AND INTERNA-TIONAL COPYRIGHT.

BY GEORGE HAVEN PUTNAM.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED APRIL 2, 1887, BEFORE THE LIBRARY SCHOOL OF COLUMBIA COLLEGE.

III.

It is hardly possible to say anything in behalf of international copyright to an audience like this that will not sound like and that will not, in fact, be an oft-repeated truism. The assumptions of the advocates of such copyright are, first, that no objections can be raised to the claims of literary producers that would not be equally valid against any other class of producers; and second, that no argument can be made against international copyright that does not apply with equal force against domestic copyright. national copyright is demanded, first, because it is right, and secondly, because it is expedient.

The most widely-spread objection to this measure of justice is that it would make books dearer. But, as Lowell says, "there is one thing better than a cheap book, and that is a book honestly come by." And as Hood put it, with equal force, "Cheap bread is as desirable and as necessary as cheap books; but it hath not yet been thought just or expedient to ordain that after a certain number of crops all cornfields shall become public property. . . . To be robbed by Time is a sorry encouragement to do work for futurity. (Hood was, we must remember, not familiar with the land theories of one of our recent candidates for Mayor.) I have no question, however, that even the author of "Progress and Poverty" would be glad to secure such increased receipts as an international copyright would bring for the results of his own literary labor, if only for the purpose of increasing the resources for the crusade against the Western settler, who, if the new land theories should prevail, is to be deprived of the results which his labor has created out of the wilderness.

International copyright is demanded:

For the sake of justice to foreign authors.

2. For the sake of justice to American authors. For the sake of the wholesome development of American literature.

4. For the sake of securing an effective and satisfactory reproduction of foreign literature. 5. To remove from our country the disgrace of being outside of the pale of civilized ethics. For the case of foreign authors there is nothing to be said that has not been said a hundred times before, and that will not occur at once to my present hearers. If Macaulay was entitled to compensation from the English and French readers who derived satisfaction from his History, it is hard to show why he should not likewise receive compensation from his much more numerous American readers.

It is true that Macaulay and other English writers whose books have been reprinted here have received payments, and in many instances very considerable payments, from their authorized American publishers. As you doubtless all know, it is to-day the practice, and it has for many years been the practice, of all reputable American publishers to make payments to English writers whose works they reprint. But the money so sent is given as a matter of courtesy, and the literary producer ought to be put in a position to secure it as a matter of right. The foreign author can possess in this country no ated books they should reply, "Timeo Danaos property rights, and has, therefore, in a legal sense, nothing to sell; while it is also the case that the authorized publisher who makes such payment is put at a disadvantage in competing with the unauthorized reprinter who pays nothing; and as the publisher who pays can secure for his outlay no title and no control, the author's remuneration is usually smaller than it ought to be, or than fairly represents the extent of the service rendered by him to his American readers. The injury to American authors from the present iniquitous state of things is two-fold:

 In refusing protection to foreign writers, we are estopped from demanding a recognition abroad for the right of American literary workers, the use of whose productions is steadily increasing in Great Britain as on the Continent, and

2. The sale of American works at home is seriously hampered and interfered with by the unequal competition of cheap issues of English works, which have paid little or nothing for authors' rights. Goods which have to be paid for do not have a fair chance against goods which can be simply appropriated. The result is that for a certain class of books by American writers, more particularly works of fiction and light literature, the sales even for authors who have secured a hearing and reputation, are much smaller than they otherwise would be, while the younger writers whose reputation is still to be made find great difficulty in securing the first favorable consideration from the publishers which is requisite in order to get their books before the public. It is only the first step that costs, but a new writer finds it no easy task to induce the American publisher under the present discouraging competition to assume for his book the cost of this first step, and I am convinced that this state of things, while possibly presenting some corresponding advantage in discouraging the printing of inadequate and uncalled-for productions, does act as a positive obstacle in the way of the development of American literature.

Readers have at their command only a certain number of hours in the year, and if a large portion of these hours are devoted to the fifteen-cent reprints of English literature, the demand for equally meritorious American works is often insufficient to render the production of these a remunerative undertaking. I am not a protectionist, and have no idea of suggesting that a bonus be paid to those who will read an American instead of an English book, but I do protest against so heavy a handicap against the American writer, especially when such handicap is based upon the robbery of his foreign competitor.

The sole consideration adduced by the defenders of the present state of things is the supposed interest of the American reader. It is seriously claimed that the intellectual and moral development of our community would be arrested if it should abandon its present mediæval practice of appropriating for itself ad libitum the literature of the outer world. We can imagine the Barbary pirates of the first years of our century taking similar ground, and maintaining that it would be impossible for their North African communities to secure a fair share of European civilization and Christianity if they should give up the time-honored practice of appropriating Christian property and Christian slaves. American readers ought to take the ground that our imported literature must be honestly come by, even it its present cost be doubled or trebled. To those offering approprispolia ferentes." We have no use for gifts which are the fruits of pillage. We decline to act as the receivers of stolen goods. We do not believe in the value of a national civilization which depends for its education on the robbery of brain products.

As an American publisher, however, I will hazard the opinion that buyers of books can be honest at a very trifling cost, and can secure, for a small increase in their present outlay, some important advantages for themselves, in addition to the satisfaction of fulfilling their obligations to the foreign writers whose services they accept. No recognition by royalties of authors' rights need bring back or could bring back the time of dear Publishers and authors have already fully realized that their interest lies in bringing their goods within the reach of the masses. the impecunious people who in this country do the largest part of the book-buying, and their requirements would continue to be met as at present. Well-printed editions of the best books of leading American authors are now being sold by the publishers representing the copyrights, at one dollar, fifty cents, or twenty-five cents a volume, while the wants of buyers preferring more substantial library editions are not neglected. Monopoly is an ugly word, but its application to the right of a man to be defended in the control of that which he has created, whether it be an "Uncle Tom's Cabin," or a farm hewn out of a forest wilderness, is not reasonable, and the owner of the "Uncle Tom"can be depended upon even more certainly than the man who has cleared for himself a farm, to do with his property what is best for the interests of the community as well as for his own.

Under an international copyright the production of American editions of foreign literature in forms suited to the requirements of the largest number of American readers would, so far from being checked, receive a healthy and active development. Under the present state of things, it often happens that an important undertaking in reprinting from English, or in translating from Continental originals cannot safely be undertaken at all. The American publisher knows that if his reprint receives favorable attention, the fruits of his literary judgment and of his investment in advertising, etc.. will be in large part appropriated by unauthorized competitors. As a result, he often has to abandon as unwise undertakings which if properly carried out would prove of material service to American There are many classes of literary enterprise which can safely be undertaken only if complete control and an undivided circle of readers can be assured. For the want of this control, no publisher is justified in taking the risk, and the American reader is deprived of the advantage of cheap American editions and must continue to pay money for the dearer and less suitable European issues. Here is an important class of cases where the want of a copyright actually increases the cost to the American reader. Another disadvantage that comes to the American reader from the present state of things is the imperfect and unsatisfactory form in which many of the reprinted volumes are now presented to him.

In the general scramble for an important English work, the American publisher who has made some payment for the advance sheets and has thereby secured a priority of perhaps a fortnight, is often obliged to rush his book through the press without proper supervision, or adequate proof-reading, and to issue with his imprint a slovenly volume of which he is himself ashamed, with which the intelligent reader is dissatisfied, and the misprints in which are promptly emphasized by the kindly critic of the N. Y. Nation as a disgrace to American publishing.

Under a copyright arrangement, a book could be prepared with sufficient time to insure decent workmanship, and the cost of its production being divided between the English and American publishers, there would be a material saving of cost, a saving of which the author and the reader would reap a full share of the advantage.

I have endeavored to present, I fear at too great length for the interest of my hearers, the disgracefulness of the present position of our nation in this matter, and to point out that there is not even any material advantage to offset the disgrace.

What is to be done to remedy the present state of things? What is it that men and women who read books and who owe something to authors, can themselves do?

It seems to me that librarians, who have now raised their calling to the dignity of a profession, subject to professional standards and to professional obligations, are under a special responsi-bility in this matter. Their positions give them a wide educational influence. Upon them rests the decision concerning the editions to be recommended or selected for purchase. Readers come to them for counsel, and committees and trustees are guided by their opinions. It is possible, of course, for them to take a narrow view of the nature of their responsibility to literature, and to assume that they have no other concern than to secure for their institution and for their readers at the smallest cost the largest amount of material, that is, the greatest number of cubic feet of books. Even from this purely commercial point of view, the trained librarian will of course bear in mind the difference between one edition and another, and will recognize that he secures fuller value for his dollar in purchasing say one volume of an authorized revised edition, correctly and decently printed, than from the purchase of two volumes representing such unrevised, incomplete, and incorrect material as can usually be obtained in the "piracy issues."

I submit, however, that a higher and wider responsibility rests upon the librarian than that of getting so many cubic inches for a dollar. He is administering a trust, a trust established for the higher education of the community, and it is incumbent upon him to keep always before him the influence exercised upon the literary and ethical standards of the community by the policy and the actions of his particular institution. I should as soon expect to hear of the venerable President of this great university sanctioning the use in its new buildings of blocks of stone stolen from our Canadian neighbors, as to see its energetic and capable librarian building up this library, which is already an honor to our city, with volumes which have been appropriated from English authors.

The libraries ought to pursue such policy as is calculated to give the largest possible return to the generation for the cause of higher education and for the development of literature, and with such end in view every library in the land should become the centre of missionary work in behalf of international copyright.

We want to secure from Congress at the earliest date possible, the largest and most intelligent measure of international copyright and international justice, which the present state of opinion and of literary enlightenment in Congress render practicable; any of you who have had anything to do with Washington will recognize that such a limitation means that if anything is to be done at all we must at the outset accept as a beginning a measure less comprehensive and more hampered with illogical restrictions than many of us consider wise or just, or than we propose to accept as a finality. On this ground, therefore, I find it necessary to dissent from my friends in the Authors' Copyright Association, who have more than once expressed their opposition to the passing of any measure that was not in their opinion complete and logical. Opposition from such a source has given to the opponents of copyright the opportunity of saying that there was no harmony of opinion among its advocates, and has more than once unquestionably hindered legislative action.

For myself, I take the simple ground that if I can't get a whole loaf, I will for the time accept a half, and if not a half then a quarter, and I claim that there is no other practical way of making progress. I am a free-trader, and look forward to the abolition of war taxes, which I believe to be unconstitutional in time of peace and unjust in the face of surplus revenues. But if we cannot at once make an end of the long list of war taxes I shall be glad at least to see a beginning made by the freeing of lumber, wool, and iron.

The efforts in behalf of international copyright, have, from the outset been very much hampered by the question being confused with that of a protective tariff, and the strongest opposition to a copyright measure has, as a rule, come from the protectionists. As early as 1868 Richard Grant White said: "The refusal of copyright in the United States to British authors is in fact, though it is not so avowed, a part of the American protective system." "With free-trade we shall have a just international copyright." It would be difficult, however, for the protectionists to show logical grounds for their position.

REFERENCE DIRECTORIES.

MESSRS. A. C. FARLEY & Co., Limited, of Philadelphia, have issued a new edition, 1887-8, of Farley's Reference Directory of the Booksellers, Stationers, and Printers in the United States and Canada, a valuable work, well known in its previous issues as a convenient reference-book of the trades concerned. It comprises a main list, alphabetical by States and towns, of booksellers, stationers, printers, publishers, etc., in the United States, covering 308 pages in double column, and including about 35,000 entries. In the larger cities, there are two main lists, one of "booksellers, stationers, etc.," the other of "printers, publishers, etc.," with reference from one to the other, the line of division being not quite clear to the uninitiated, besides others of specialties, names being somewhat duplicated in these lists. The ouyer of a house is named or indicated by an asterisk-a useful feature. The line of business is given by clear abbreviations, and ratings of capital and credit are given by means of figures; so far as we have been able test the ratings, they are of little or of negative value, but the difficulties of accuracy in this direction are almost insurmountable. To this list is appended one for Canada. Then follow separate alphabets of bookbinders, paper-box manufacturers, and purchasing agents of railroads. We are glad to note that this useful work is supported by a good supply of advertisements, which are well placed in a book of such constant reference. Messrs. Farley enterprisingly issue with the book a supplement of changes and corrections which had come to their notice during the printing of the book, and hold out every assurance of keeping their subscribers thoroughly posted, even to the extent of furnishing special reports at a merely nominal price. The cost of the book is $15.

"GEYER'S REFERENCE DIRECTORY" for 1887 has just been issued. It contains the names of nearly thirty thousand dealers in books, stationery, artists' materials, games, toys, jewelry, music, notions, picture-frames, sporting goods, also, manufacturing stationers, envelope and paper box manufacturers, paper-mills, book publishers, subscription-book agents, bookbinders, lithographers, etc. It also attempts to give approximate ratings of the financial standing of the names represented, but this feature is probably its weakest point. The information given in this volume, it is stated, is not a compilation from other directories, but has been obtained and verified by actual correspondence. A large number of new names have been added, and the directory is claimed to contain none but live men who were actively engaged in business at the time the book went to press. In addition to the list of manufacturers and dealers in kindred branches, the directory contains a full list of the paper-mills in the country, together with information as to the kind and quantity of paper made each day. A classified index to the same is in the front of the book. The price is $5.

A NEW CHICAGO PUBLISHING FIRM.

MR. JOHN C. BUCKBEE, who has been an active partner in the firm of S. C. Griggs & Co. for nearly fifteen years, has recently withdrawn therefrom, taking with him twenty or more of their publications. Their list comprises Bacon's "Manual of Gesture," Brown's "Wit and Humor," Buckingham's "Différential and Integral Calculus," Carew's "Tangled," Cone's "Two Years in California," Fawcett's "Hand-book of Finance," Hall's "Lyrics of Home Land," Ingersoll's "The Crest of the Continent," Kennedy's "Wonders and Curiosities of the Railway" Lorimer's "Isms Old and New," "Jesus, the World's Saviour," and "Studies in Social Life," Maertz's "New Method for the Study of English Literature," Mahan's "System of Mental Philosophy," "Mishaps of Mr. Ezekiel Pelter," Raymond's "Orator's Manual," Robertson's 'Living Thoughts," Roger's "The Waverly Dictionary," Sawyer's "Practical German Grammar," Valentine's "National Theology," Welsh's "Essentials of English" and "Complete Rhetoric," Wheeler's "The Foreigner in China," and Zur Brücke's "German without Grammar."

As will be seen the new firm (which will do business under the firm-name of J. C. Buckbee & Co.) expects to give special attention to the publication of text-books for school and college use, but will also publish books in general literature. With many years of practical experience in the Western book-trade, an excellent list to start with, and ample capital, the new firm sets out most auspiciously. They have opened handsome quarters at 122 and 124 Wabash Avenue, and will be pleased to meet their friends, old and new. We extend to them on behalf of the trade a hearty welcome.

DECISION IN THE RAG CASE.

At noon on April 29 the end in the rag case of Lockwood & McClintock vs. Bartlett & Co. and Health Officer Smith for alleged fraud in regard to rag disinfection was reached, the jury finding judgment for $8000 against Bartlett & Co. The plaintiffs, it will be remembered, claimed $15,000 damages for the detention for compulsory "dis-national, with some remarks on the position of infection" of their rags, imported from Italy and authors and publishers by a publisher." Japan during the cholera scare of 1885, by the defendants, who, it was alleged, conspired to extort money from the plaintiffs. In regard to Dr. Smith, the Health Officer, the jury were unable to agree, standing, it is said, 10 to 1 against him. At one time the jury stood 10 to 1 in favor of bringing in a verdict for $11,300 against Bartlett & Co. It is understood that Bartlett & Co. will take an appeal.

BUSINESS NOTES.

Sanders succeeded this concern when Mr. Ellis went into the fancy stationery business. Now B. & J. B. Sanders have gone out of the line of books to carry on a wholesale stationery business, and Mr. Ellis returns to his old stand to carry on a book and stationery business alone.

NEW YORK CITY. J. Parker White and Frank Allen, both of the late firm of White, Stokes & Allen, have formed a partnership for the purpose of transacting a general publishing and bookselling business in an exclusively wholesale way. They expect to be able to show the trade in time for the fall season a number of dainty novelties, together with some handsome illustrated books and a remarkable collection of miscellaneous They have taken temporary offices at 94 books. Wall Street, but hope to be in permanent quarters by July 1.

THE FINANCIER COMPANY, N. Y., has issued a "History of the Stock Exchange and Clearing-House Systems," containing statistics, lists of members, rules and regulations, and other information.

FREDERIC DIELMAN has just finished a beautiful drawing of Gwendolin for the new édition de luxe of George Eliot's works published by Estes & Lauriat. The volume of "Daniel Deronda" in which it appears, will be ready early next month.

THE early closing idea has developed promptly in the Boston book-trade, all the leading publishing-houses, with one or two exceptions, agreeing to close their places of business at 5 P.M. daily and on Saturdays at 2 P.M. through, May, June, July, and August.

SIR AUSTEN HENRY LAYARD is now preparing for the press his early adventures in Persia, Susiana, and Babylonia, which will include an account of his residence among the Bakhtiyari and other wild tribes before the discovery of Nineveh. It will be published by Mr. John Murray.

Wм, Paul Gerhard, 39 Union Square, West, N. Y., will publish shortly a second edition of his pamphlet on "The Prevention of Fire." will be printed on heavier paper and will have a firmer cover than the first edition, which was exhausted in five months.

MR. RUSKIN writes that he intends to carry his autobiography no further than 1875, and he has concluded to abandon the work entitled "Our Fathers Have Told Us." "The more," he adds, "that I perceive the new generation round us cares nothing about what its fathers either did or said."

An early volume in the Canterbury Poets series will comprise the plays of Beaumont and Fletcher, selected and edited, with an introductory essay, by Mr. J. S. Fletcher. "The Poetical Works of Heine," translated and arranged by Mrs. Frieligrath Krocker, will be issued in the same series.

THE BALTIMORE PUBLISHING COMPANY will publish on May 15 a popular Life of Catharine McAuley, foundress of the order of Sisters of Mercy, edited by the Sisters of Mercy, St. Louis, Mo., with a preface by Rev. T. A. Butler, Rector of St. Cronan's, St. Louis. This work has been carefully written and revised to meet a long felt want for a correct life of the foundress of the largest order of religious sisters. It will be illustrated with two full-page engravings of Catharine McAuley from a painting in Dublin and of two Sisters of Mercy in street costume ready for the visitation of the sick.

SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & Co. have just published the long-promised "Life of Rosina, Lady Lytton," by Miss Devey, which has been prepared with the express object of clearing up certain popular misconceptions of that lady's character, and of giving an insight into the true cause of her lifelong quarrels with her husband.

ELLIOT STOCK, London, has just ready another volume in the Book-Lover's Library on "The Dedication of Books to Patron and Friend," by Henry B. Wheatley. Not content with merely gathering his specimens, Mr. Wheatley has sorted, arranged and classified them with that instinctive love of method which distinguishes the true bibliographer. Commencing with the period of the patron, when the author was naturally desirous of linking his name with that of the friend whose kindly interest was extended to his work, we proceed, through various fashions, to the time when the custom had fallen into an abyss of degradation, and eulogy could be bought at so many pence or shillings per line. But the market was overstocked, and dedications became a drug. Pope's satire helped to purge Grub Street of this iniquity. At length we come to modern dedications with a variety of examples of the practice followed by famous authors of the present century. The book has an excellent index.

S. E. CASSINO, 137 High St., Boston, will shortly issue, under the title of "The Picturesque Coast of New England," a handsome volume containing twelve photogravures from drawings by Louis K. Harlow, each plate being sixteen by twenty inches in dimensions. These pictures "Mount Desert," "Castine, Me.," "Rockland, Me.," "Portsmouth, N. H.," "The Isles of Shoals," "Newburyport, Mass.," "Nahant, Mass.," "Nantucket" and "Newport, R. I.," "Coasters," and a "Glimpse of Long Island Sound from the Connecticut Shore." Mr. Harlow's talent and exceptional facility in execution are uncommonly displayed in these sketches, which also reveal a romantic vein of sentiment. The book will have a unique cover of dark brown mottled boards, upon which, in relief, will stand out a white sail of real canvas bearing in Pompeian red letters the title. Above this, at the left, a golden net will be draped across the corner of the cover, while white sea-gulls will be seen here and there flying across the brown field. There will be an edition of twenty-five copies on satin and fifty copies on Japan paper, which Mr. Harlow will sign, while the balance of the edition will consist of one thousand copies on heavy plate paper.

JOURNALISTIC.

THE subject for the next prize essay in Wal-ford's Antiquarian will be "The Origin and History of Change-Ringing."

Roundabout to Moscow.

An Epicurean Journey. By JOHN BELL BOUTON. 12mo, cloth, $1.75.

"'Roundabout to Moscow: An Epicurean Journey,' promises to do something toward allaying the present keen appetite for unprejudiced information about Russia. The author, Mr. John Bell Bouton, has seen that country, her institutions and her people with American eyes, free from the old national prejudices which so deeply tinge the minds of English writers. While the book is in that particular a complete antidote for British bane it is a jovial record of travel and admiration. Mr. Bouton's sole purpose is to entertain and amuse his readers. Americans going abroad this year will find his 'primrose path' to and from Moscow an agreeable one."

AMERICAN TRADE-MARK CASES.

In 1880, and which contains an abstract of all Trade-mark cases reported down to December, 1899. The last digest is that of Cordington, published in 1898.

The present volume is designed to embrace the field of both of the books above mentioned from the date of their publication to the present time. It will contain a complete report of all the reported cases decided by Courts in the United States, both State and Federal, as well as by the Commissioner of Patents, and the briefs of counsel where such have been obtained.

It will also contain a subject digest of law points decided by the cases published. This volume will be of special value to the legal profession in all parts of the country, because the remedies for infringement of trademarks now at the command of trade-mark owners lie entirely in the Equity Courts, both State and Federal, and arise under the common law, except in a few of the States where trade-mark statutes exist. While the Federal statute was in existence the practice in trade-mark cases was confined to the Federal Courts, and in great measure to attorneys making a specialty of practice in cases was confined to the Federal Courts, and in great measure to attorneys making a specialty of practice in those courts; but at present, with such a volume at hand, any State practitioner may with contidence undertake a trade-mark case. A system of reference from digest to syllabus, and from syllabus to section of opinion, has been adopted in printing these cases, which the editors feel will be of material assistance in using the volume. The cases collected are gathered from almost every State of the Union, and from about one hundred and fifty volumes.

Compiled and edited by Benjamin Price and Arthur Stewart, of the Baltimare Bar.
Will make a volume of upwards of 700 pages; will be published in the best Law-Book style. Price, $7.50. Orders solicited. Edition limited.

"The recent prize competition for stories, held by the publishers of the louth's Companion, called forth about 5000 aspirants for literary honors, among that multitude Mr. Homer Greene, of Honesdale, Pa., whose story, 'The Blind Brother,' took the first prize of $1500, probably the largest sum ever paid for a story to a hitherto comparatively unknown writer. 'The Blind Brother' deals with life in the coal-mining region of the Wyoming Valley, and is remarkable for its dramatic intensity, power of characterization, humor, and pathos."

By MARVIN R. VINCENT, D.D. The Synoptic Gospels, Acts of the Apostles, and the Epistles of Peter, James, and Jude. 8vo. $4.00.

The scope of this scholarly and important contribution to the critical study of the text of the New Testament is broad and comprehensive, the work being the fruit of many years' laborious research. Dr. Vincent outlines the purpose of the work in these sentences from his preface:

"The present work is an attempt in a field which, so far as I am aware, is not covered by any one book, though it has been carefully and ably worked by many scholars. Taking a position midway between the exegetical commentary and the lexicon and grammar, it aims to put the reader of the English Bible nearer to the standpoint of the Greek scholar, by opening to him the native force of the separate words of the New Testament in their lexical sense, their etymology, their history, their inflection, and the peculiarities of their usage by different evangelists and apostles."

"In Mr. Bunner's 'Story of a New York House,' the first years of the century are picturesquely set before us, and in the treatment one perceives the union of grace and strength which may denote the work of a writer of the first contemporary rank in America."

NOTES IN SEASON.

Belford, Clarke & Co., Chicago and New York, have just issued "Fifty Years a Queen," by Mrs. Katherine Hodge, a succinct history of our own times clearly and simply told.

THE WORTHINGTON COMPANY will publish next week a "Life of Washington," by Virginia F. Townsend. The author in her preface says: "The brief biography in these pages must claim to be a woman's way of looking at George Washington. In going over the familiar ground, the author believes she has entered some by-paths where she has gained a new view of the figure which stands in solitary majesty in the heart of the American people." The book has a fine steelplate portrait of Washington and a number of wood-cuts.

T. B. PETERSON & BROS. will publish next week "Renée (La Curée)," by Emile Zola, translated by John Sterling. It is said to be a study of the life led by a certain class of speculators and pleasure-seekers, who made the gay capital of France their home and field of operations during the reign of Napoleon the third.

HARPER & BROS. publish this week Laurence Oliphant's new book, "Episodes in a Life of Adventure, or, moss from a rolling stone." Mr. Oliphant argues that a rolling stone does gather moss; he meets with adventures, acquires experiences, and gains a general knowledge of the world, the whole contributing to form a rich fund of reminiscences. They have also just ready the long-looked-for "Random Recollec-tions," by the late Henry B. Stanton. Two editions of this book have already been sold privately, the present being the first to be regularly Mr. Stanton died in January last, and was busy correcting the proofs of this book the day before his death. His life was an eventful one, and he knew almost every "distinguished citizen" of his time, and was connected with some of the most important movements of the day.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & Co. will publish next week the life of Henry Clay in the series of American Statesmen. It will contain two volumes, written by Mr. Carl Schurz, and both subject and author insure a work of unusual value and interest. At the same time will appear a book of poems by Mrs. Margaret J. Preston, of Virginia, entitled "Colonial Ballads, Sonnets, and other Verse," a book considerably above the average of American poetry, both in thought and lyric genius; a military criticism by Col. Carswell McClellan, who was on the staff of Gen. Humphreys and Gen. Meade, and who points out some grave errors which Gen. Grant has made in regard to these officers in his Personal Memoirs; curious Shakespearean conundrum entitled "Was Shakespeare Shapleigh? a correspondence in two entanglements," edited by Justin Winsor, of Harvard; and a continuation of the English Dramatists, with the works of John Marston in three volumes, edited by Mrs. Bullen, of the British

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS make the following additional announcements for the spring season: "7 to 12," a new story by Anna Katharine Green, author of "The Leavenworth Case;" "Told at Tuxedo," a series of tales by two writers; a new edition, revised and with additional material, of "How to Travel: hints, advice, and suggestions for travellers by land and sea, by Thomas W. Knox; a popular and cheaper edition, with 37 illustrations, of "Voice, Song, and Speech," a practical guide for singers and speakers from the point of view of vocal surgeon and voice trainer, by Lennox Browne and Emil Behnke; "The Curability of Insanity and the Individualized Treatment of the Insane," by John S. Butler, M.D., late physician and superintendent of the Connecticut Retreat for the Insane; and, in the Questions of the Day series, "The Fishery Question," a summary of its history and an analysis of the issues involved, together with a full bibliography of authorities to be consulted, and a map of the fishing-grounds. by Charles Isham.

'A story of Boston, although not a society novel. The main interest of the book lies in a letter written by a physician, who, by brooding over a mysterious trouble, has become insane. This letter contains the secret of his life, and he places it in the hands of a young lady to whom his son is attached, and pledges her to secrecy until after his death. The existence of this letter, known only to the young lady, seriously complicates affairs. At last the physician dies, and the contents of the letter are made public. They are startling enough, but what for years had seemed like a black crime to the diseased mind of the suffering man turns out to have been something very the suffering man turns out to have been something very different.

By the author of "A Washington winter," "The lost name," and other stories. A romantic story of Southern life, before the war, told in the first person. The heroine paints in glowing colors the past glories of the rich planter's home and hospitality and also gives a glimpse of some of the horrors of slavery. The story, however, can scarcely be called one with a purpose, although it does enter into the question of miscegenation—the young girl who is the narrator having given her heart to a young man of cultivation and charming exterior to whom a suspicion attaches of being the child of a slave woman. *Dawson G: Francis Life of Gen. Minor, T: C. Athothis: a satire on modern medicine. Cin., Rob. Clarke & Co., 1887. c. 3+194 p. D. cl., $1.25.
Some of the methods of modern medicine are satirised in a clever and ingenious way. Dr. Paulus Androcydes discovers the art of recalling a mummy to life that has been an inmate of his study for years. This mummy is Athothis, an Egyptian, who discourses in a learned way not only of medicine in the past, but of the transmigration of souls, showing how under various shapes in different periods of the earth's history he was enabled to penetrate wonderful secrets of science. Dr. Paulus is reduced to an invisible spirit for a time through his arts, and together they visit many sick-beds. Here are very sharply pointed out some of the errors and absurdities of modern medical treatment. treatment.

Taking as his principal characters a wealthy Chicago speculator and his wife and daughter, and placing them in Europe, first at Monte Carlo, then at Paris, and finally in London, at all of which places they are courted for their wealth, the author has an excellent opportunity for contrasting the manners and opinions of Europeans and Americans. This is done quite impartially. If the reader at one moment feels his countrymen are being shown up quite ruthlessly, the next he is appeased by a genuine compliment. The same fairness is shown to the other side. The English are especially the theme of many shrewd paragraphs. The story is quite fresh and attractive as a story, having two interesting love episodes. Names of real personages are used so freely that the book created quite a sensation on its first appearance recently in London. in London.

She dwelt among them, lived in their families and spoke their language, entered into their ways of living, and by so doing learned to understand their spirit and traits of character to an extent that could have been done in no other way. She chose, too, a remarkably fortunate time for her sojourn. Her going was immediately after the consolidation of the empire, and she was there during the fourth centenary year of the birth of Martin Luther, so that she had the best of opportunities for witnessing the imposing celebrations which took place in honor of the great reformer. The scene is laid in Sandhole, a town of mushroom growth, which owes its prominence to the finding of petroleum; the hero, idly visiting the place, is induced to become a partner of an enterprising friend, who shows him the feasibility of sinking a well in a pit called "The devil's hat;" here the events of the story evolve themselves, and the reader is interested and puzzled by the conduct of Joyce Selden, Ogden's falling in love with Patrice, and a happy reunion. The author's style is at once humorous, cynical, and pathetic; he seems to have an aptitude for character sketching which is displayed in Joyce Selden, "Tickley Bender," Major Dibbs, and the Hon. Hewson Dilster, who is natural enough to be a portrait. The scene is laid in Sandhole, a town of mushroom portrait.

" Every man is a debtor to his profession, from the which, as men do of course seek to receive countenance and profit, so ought they of duty to endeavor themselves by way of amends to be a help thereunto."-LORD BACON.

Mr. W. M. Griswold, now of Washington, better known as "Q. P. Index," of Bangor, Me., has added to his many services to the trade by preparing a list of copyright expirations from April 1 to June 30 which should be of double value to the trade, first, in warning those interested of an approaching expiration in time for a renewal entry to be made; secondly, in informing publishers at large as to copyright books which they are at liberty to reprint if they choose. Mr. Griswold undertook to send his quarterly list on receipt of a dollar, and we regret to learn that but fourteen publishers have responded to his proposition, another example of the discouragement met with by men working in this line. The list is excellently done and includes a record of those books on which copyright was completed by deposit of copy. In the list of 301 books which Mr. Griswold schedules are several of present interest and value, though, of course, a great many are no more than titles to the reader or publisher of to-day. The former are well worth saving, yet a publisher is very apt to let a chance for renewals go by for lack of information, while the author or his heirs are almost always careless on such a subject. Our copyright records being entirely in manuscript are so inaccessible in practical respects, that a publication like Mr. Griswold's is of real service, and we regret very much that the return to him has been as usual only sufficient to pay printer's expenses.

As we take a sort of paternal interest in the "Descriptive Price List of New Books" of Mr. Wanamaker's Book News, being made up in part | in Boston.

of our own offspring, we beg to call its editor's attention to the fact that he got some of the babies badly mixed in the May issue. In the department of Reference-books, on page 314, he put our notice of "Cassell's Complete Pocket Guide to Europe" under the title of "Loomis' Index Guide" and the Sun's notice of the latter under the Cassell book. It may not make much difference to their stepfather, but, as we remarked at the beginning, our fatherly heart and eyes take a pride in having our progeny make a proper showing, even when removed from our own care, especially as the Book News, unlike many others who simply kidnap them, is honestly particular in the matter of stating their ancestry.

AN IMPORTANT CHANGE.

THE rumor which has been abroad for some time to the effect that Belford, Clarke & Co. had found their dry-goods counters in the East to be of little profit, and that they were contemplating giving them up, has become a fact, as far as the latter circumstance is concerned. That this is information that will make many a drooping bookseller look more hopefully into the future, no one will doubt. With this firm's reform in the method of doing business one of the most important elements that conspired to make life uneasy and a burden to the "local bookseller" has been re-

It will be considered equally encouraging news to the trade that in making this move Messrs. Belford, Clarke & Co. have entrusted the agency of all their publications to Charles T. Dillingham. Mr. Dillingham has the confidence of the entire trade, consumer as well as producer, and he certainly has the experience, as few in the jobbing trade have it, to make the change of advantage alike to Messrs. Belford, Clarke & Co. and the booksellers.

The Western branch of Belford, Clarke & Co. They will confine themremains unchanged. selves, at least as far as the Eastern trade is concerned, to the manufacture of editions, the building up of their subscription editions, and the publication of new copyright books, of which their list now contains a goodly number. sets now issued by this house include most of the great standard authors, and the change will make the retail trade much more ready to handle them.

CUPPLES & HURD.

As will be noted elsewhere in this issue, Mr. J. G. Cupples, formerly of Cupples, Upham & Co., has associated with himself Mr. Alfred Dennis Hurd, and will do business at 94 Boylston Street, Boston, under the firm-name of Cupples & Hurd. Mr. A. D. Hurd, a son of Mr. M. M. Hurd, of the old firm of Hurd & Houghton, is well known to the trade, in connection with the manufacturing and publishing departments of Houghton, Mifflin & Co. He will devote himself to that branch in the new house, and Mr. Cupples will give his entire attention to the retail department. It is their intention to make their store an uptown book-store after the style of the Putnams, of New York. They are having their quarters fitted up in very handsome style and will heartily welcome any of the trade who may stop

A PUBLISHER'S JUBILEE YEAR.

In February last Lee & Shepard celebrated their twenty-fifth anniversary as a firm, and last week Mr. William Lee celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his entrance into the book-trade, beginning when he was a boy of eleven years. Mr. Lee first entered the employ of S. G. Drake, the well-known historian and, at that time, antiquarian bookseller. At sixteen years of age he went over to O. S. Perkins, where he was initiated into all the arts and devices of bookselling, his principal occupation being "auctioneering." It was his custom to take a stock of books to Worcester and Providence, both large towns for those days, and also through Maine. He generally hired a store for a short time, and employed a local auctioneer to help him dispose of his stock. He tells many an amusing anecdote of his experience in this line of business.

At the age of twenty he took a position in the house of Phillips, Sampson & Co., then the foremost bookselling and publishing house in Boston, and three years later was made a partner. The quarters then occupied by them were on the corner of Water and Washington Streets. In 1857 Mr. Lee left the firm and went abroad, returning in 1859, after Phillips, Sampson & Co. had failed. In the following year he became a member of the firm of Crosby, Nichols, Lee & Co.

On the first day of February, 1862, Mr. Lee, in connection with Mr. Charles B. Shepardhighly intelligent as regards literature, capable and wide-awake as a business manager, and the life and soul of good company—who was a clerk with John P. Jewett & Co. at the time, formed the now time-honored firm of Lee & Shepard. This may now be considered the oldest firm known to the book-trade, in that it has stood without change, and having all its members alive and in active service. Mr. Lee, as well as his partner, we are pleased to note, is in excellent health, without ache or pain, and is enjoying his lot in life in perfect contentment. He is constantly planning new schemes and working out new ideas, some of which he will submit to the trade this fall, and which will demonstrate that he is not yet to be laid upon the shelf. The trade will, undoubtedly, unite with us in extending to Mr. Lee and to the firm of Lee & Shepard all best wishes for their personal welfare and prosperity in the future, as well as for such a bountiful ingathering of this year's harvest as shall fill their pockets with gain, in proportion as their hearts are filled with the pleasant memories of the past.

In connection with Mr. Lee's fiftieth anniversary, the Boston Herald indulges in a retrospect which presents the following interesting points concerning the early book-trade in Boston:

The passing of the fiftieth anniversary of the connection with the book-trade of Mr. William Lee, one of the oldest men connected with it in Boston, is a reminder that there is but one house of importance now in that trade here that was in existence at the date of Mr. Lee's beginning -that of Little, Brown & Co. The Ticknor house was established then, but its partners later so separated as to leave no undisputed claimant to the exclusive succession, while still a third firm does the business of bookselling at the stand made by the Ticknor house so famous. The leading publishers of Boston at this time, besides the Ticknors and Little & Brown, were Crocker & Brewster, Gould & Lincoln, and James each other on Washington Street. Into this territory soon after came Phillips & Sampson, with which house Mr. Lee in time became connected.

The Ticknors were the only house to publish considerably for several years. Later, Phillips & Sampson had an important agency in extending the amount of publishing done here. They originally had an auction store to sell books in the evening, in connection with their jobbing and retail business, in which Mr. Lee was sometimes auctioneer. Mr. A. K. Loring, so well known since as a retailer and publisher, became somewhat later their leading retail clerk. firm at length hired the store on Winter Street, and here they began the issue of the Atlantic Monthly, Mr. Lee having, in the meantime, both become a partner and retired from the business.

Perhaps a still greater push was given to publishing in Boston about this period, however, by the phenomenal success of the firm of John P. Jewett & Co. He came to the city from Salem (as Mr. Phillips did from Worcester), and had a store in Cornhill, principally for the publication of school-books. Here "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was brought out, with a success the story of which has often been told. It was followed by another exceedingly popular venture in Miss Cumming's novel, "The Lamplighter." There was for years a steady sale to "Uncle Tom's Cabin" after the furore which sent it over a hundred thousand copies had ceased, and "The Lamplighter" did not stop in its success until 75,000 copies had been When it is remembered that 5000 copies was then (as, indeed, it is now) a large sale for a copyright novel; that "The Scarlet Letter" was not even stereotyped, so little confidence was there in future editions when first produced, and that as late as after Hawthorne found the acknowledgment from the public which his "Scar-let Letter" brought him, it is doubtful if it gave him a sale of 10,000 copies, it will be realized what those other successes meant. They were not followed by still others, and Mr. Jewett in the end failed to prove a sagacious publisher.

Both the Phillips and the Jewett house were defunct when this partnership of Lee & Shepard was formed. It has stood without change now longer than any other that is familiar in the booktrade. Roberts Bros. came later. The firm of Lee & Shepard is an outgrowth from houses which mark a new era in publishing in Boston.

PROPOSED INCREASE IN CANADIAN TARIFF ON BOOKS.

From the American Stationer.

THE Canadian Government has in view the increase of the duty at present levied on printed books, stationery, and envelopes, and a meeting of the Montreal book and stationery trade was last week called to protest against the increase.

Our trade in books with our Canadian cousins is constantly increasing both in standard and educational works and the lighter grade of literature just now so popular. Of course the increased duty is paid by the consumer, but once get the article too high, and the consumer cannot afford to buy it. The cheaper the book can be placed upon the market, just so many more peo-ple can it reach. It is equally so with every other article, the low-priced having always a larger range and sale. Books, of course, the Monroe & Co., all within a short distance of Canadian schools must have, and where can tet ter be found than those offered by the Appletons and Harpers? But the sale of the cheaper class of popular books and novels would certainly be injured by any increase of the present rate of duty, and the Canadian booksellers are furthering their own interests in entering a protest.

"In the cheaper grades of stationery and envelopes, we do quite a trade with the Canadians," say Messrs. Geo. B. Hurd & Co., "and any increase of the tariff on those articles would, of course, affect us unfavorably."

The Whiting Paper Co., when spoken to on the same subject by the reporter, expressed themselves substantially the same, although their trade across the border is in the finer lines.

"ORNAMENTAL" BOOKS.

Any one who has ever penetrated the mysteries of the average country parlor, with its grave-like, damp, and mouldy air, relieved now and then by the not much more agreeable odor of dried weeds and grasses, will perhaps understand why it is that so many subscription-books of a certain kind find purchasers in the owners, not inhabitants, of such parlors. He will, no doubt, come to the conclusion that they serve very much the same purpose that ornamental tablets do in the family mausoleum-and that they are read about as often. The latest evidence of this we find in the story told us recently by a bookbinder. He had in hand a number of books, two of which happened to be of the same size, and were to be bound alike. The one was entitled "The Life of Our Saviour," the other "Our Protectors." former was, as the title implies, a life of Christ, and had for a frontispiece a steel-plate representing the Nazarene; the latter was a history of the New York police, and had a frontispiece representing "one of the finest." In collating the books the illustrations became somewhat mixed, so much so that nearly 500 copies went out in which the frontispiece of "Our Protectors" was inserted in "The Life of Our Saviour, and vice versa. "Well," concludes the binder, " the books have now been out over a year, and so far only five copies have been returned." With this might go the story a bookseller told a newspaper reporter, in proof that a book needed only to be gaudily bound and sold cheap to find buyers. "I remember," he says, "the experience of a publisher, a friend of mine, that proves the truth of my view. He bought at an auction sale for a song plates of Southey's 'Thalaba' which once formed a part of a complete set of plates of Southey's works. My friend issued an edition of 'Thalaba'-which, you know, is a lurid nightmare which no one understands, and no one but the proof-reader has ever read through-bound it in an elaborate and attractive style, and threw it on the market as a holiday gift-book at $1.50. It sold like hot-cakes. Of course, no one that bought it ever tried to unravel the delirious puzzle the book contained; but it was poetry, it bore the name of a well-known author, it was bound in a style that made it a good centre-table ornament, it was cheap-and that was enough.

We regret to note the death of Thomas Knox, the father of Thomas R. and David C. Knox. The deceased was well known, especially in New York political circles, and was a prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which denomination he held an official position for many years.

NOTES ON AUTHORS.

Mr. RIDER HAGGARD has sent a strong letter to the London Times, stating the case as between himself and The Pall Mall Gasette.

SIR EDWARD WATKIN, the well-known railroad president, will shortly publish a book entitled "Canada and the United States—Recollections from 1851 to 1886."

"THOROLD KING," author of that romantic tale, "Haschisch," issued last season by A. C. McClurg & Co., proves to be Dr. Charles Gatchell, of Chicago.—Literary World.

THE REV. W. W. TULLOCH is preparing for publication, through Nisbet, a "Life of the Queen, for Boys and Girls," which the Queen is said to have honored with her personal revision.

MRS. JESSE BENTON FRÉMONT will, it is said, spend the summer in the West for the purpose of writing an accurate Life of Kit Carson, the famous scout, pathfinder, and explorer, who piloted General Frémont across the Rocky Mountains on his first expedition.

MISS ROSE ELIZABETH CLEVELAND has become associated in the editorial management of the American Magazine of History. In the fall she is to conduct the studies of the senior and postgraduate classes in American history of Mrs. Sylvanus Reed's school for young ladies in the city of New York.

C. H. LUDERS and S. Decatur Smith, Jr., of Philadelphia, known by their initials as writers of vers de société and light lyrics, are said to be the authors of the volume of verses called "Hallo, My Fancy!" to be issued by David McKay. They found their title in a phrase of a poem of two centuries ago by William Cleland.

F. II. UNDERWOOD, the author of "The Handbook of English Literature," and other notable books issued by Lee & Shepard, has recently had the honor of receiving the title of Doctor of Civil Law from the University of Glasgow, Scotland. Mr. Underwood is our U. S. Consul at Glasgow, and has gained a large circle of friends during his short residence there, having delivered, the past winter, a course of lectures before the university.

BUSINESS NOTES.

ALBANY, N. Y.—B. & J. B. Sanders, book-sellers and stationers, have sold out their retail stock.

ARKADELPHIA, ARK.—W. L. Patterson, book-seller and stationer, has been succeeded by Thompson & Sweet.

BOSTON, MASS.—W. A. Babcock for thirteen years manager of the Boston Agency of D. Appleton & Co.. has given up his position there, to engage in the miscellaneous commission book business at 24 Franklin St.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.—Edward P. Judd, for the past twenty-nine years doing business at No. 760 Chapel St., has removed to the more commodious store, No. 848 Chapel St., a block and three-quarters above his former location. He now occupies two floors, each 135 by 21 feet, with much more elegant and convenient quarters than formerly, an enlarged stock, special attention being given to rare and curious books. A new lease of prosperity may be confidently looked for by this enterprising and well-equipped bookseller.

NEW YORK CITY.—Frederick A. Stokes announces that he has purchased all the interest of his former partners in the firm of White, Stokes & Allen, together with the good-will of the business, the entire list of publications, the lease of the store, 182 Fifth Avenue, etc. He also retains the entire force of employes of the former firm.

NEW YORK CITY.—The Tibbals Book Company (Rob. J. Lomas, Jr., trustee), formerly N. Tibbals' Sons, have removed to 26 Warren St.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—George C. McConnell, representing the American Tract Society, announces a gratifying increase in his business. Also that, notwithstanding the material increase in the rates of freight, his prices will remain unchanged.

Springfield, Mass.—The Old Corner Bookstore, now occupied by Whitney & Adams, has been in existence for fifty-three years.

Washington, D. C.—The Metropolitan Bookstore, No. 915 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C., we learn from the American Stationer, is in new hands. The former owner, Jas. J. Chapman, who has been for the past year or more conducting it as agent for J. J. Murphy, of New York, has been superseded by Chas. W. Wood, formerly manager of Brentano's stationery department. Mr. Wood brings to his aid an experience of nine or ten years and should certainly make his venture a success. Mr. Chapman has opened a new store around the corner on Ninth Street, and will be known to the trade as Chapman & Co.

BASE-BALL NOTES.

THE CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS nine will play the nines from Funk & Wagnalls on the 14th and The Century Company on the 21st.

THE base-ball nines of the employees of Funk & Wagnalls and Wm. Wood & Co. played a game Saturday afternoon, May 7, at Prospect Park. Score, resulting in favor of Funk & Wagnalls:

Funk & Wagnalls...... 3 4 6 0 4 7 0 . . . -rg Wm. Wood & Co....... 1 0 1 0 3 0 0 . . . -rg

THE nine of Charles Scribner's Sons and that of the C. T. Dillingham and Thomas Nelson & Sons combination were put down for a match on the 7th. The game was to take place on one of the vacant lots in the upper part of New York City. The regular Scribner nine being unable to attend, substitutes from the store were sent. The Dillingham-Nelson crew mustered only four men when the roll was called. The Scribner nine then proposed that a friendly game be played, and, confident of easy success, proposed that the other side pick five out of the "field." In a short time the quota was made up, the game begun, and-that was the end of the Scribner nine. They evidently left out of calculation that those particular "b'hoys," playing from morning till night, seven days in the week, always had their "hands in" and might give "points" even to some of the "crack" nines. And so it was that the Dillingham-Nelson (?) side had a walk-over-scoring 10

THE ARMSTRONG & KNAUER PUBLISHING Co., 822 Broadway, N. Y., have just issued a directory of the manufacturers of the United States for domestic and foreign trade.

THE Acme Stationery & Paper Co. have removed their manufactory from Centre St. to the building they have recently erected on 9th St. and Wyeth Ave., Brooklyn.

A. E. Costello, 2 W. 14th St., N. Y., has just issued a work entitled "Our Firemen: a history of the New York Fire Departments, volunteer and paid." It is copiously illustrated, and contains a large number of portraits, with accompanying biographical sketches.

Moulton & Co. will hereafter also devote themselves to the publishing of books. They have a number of publications in preparation, and are giving attention to others.

The wily man with the sham paper parcel is about again, helping himself to the Webster's Unabridged wherever he is not watched. We are surprised to hear that a wide-awake dealer on Broadway was caught napping after all the publicity that was given to this chevalier de l'industrie and his ingenious contrivance.

THE Critic states that a memorial volume of the late Prof. E. L. Youmans will be prepared by his brother and sister, W. J. and Eliza A. Youmans, and that it will contain a number of manuscripts and important letters, including his correspondence with Darwin, Spencer, Mill, Huxley, Tyndall, Lubbock, Agassiz, and other distinguished persons.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & Co. issue this week the third and fourth volumes of their beautiful edition of the Poems and Dramas of Robert Browning. They announce, as a forthcoming addition to the Riverside Literature series, "The Succession of Forest Trees and Wild Apples," by Thoreau, with the biographical introduction by Emerson.

THAT interesting child of light, the American girl, after receiving the respects of James and Howells, has undergone treatment from a new point of view. Henry Holt & Co. have just published, by arrangement with the author, the new anonymous English novel, with American revisions, "Miss Bayle's Romance," which deals with the doings of Miss Bayle, of Chicago, and her family, among the effete aristocracy of the Old World. This novel, which is reported to be the work of a hand well known in literature, has been considered important enough to be the subject of some cablegrams to the press.

Frederick A. Stokes, successor to White, Stokes & Allen, 182 Fifth Avenue, N. Y., announces that he has in preparation a large number of new publications of literary and artistic excel-Ience, which he will bring out in the same general manner as that in which he has put forth the former publications of White, Stokes & Allen, as the manufacturing department has been in his charge. He is also preparing many novel and original styles of binding and make-up for forthcoming publications of various natures.

Brentano Brothers, New York, have in press a volume entitled "Tales Before Supper," translated from the French of Gautier and of Merrimée, by Myndart Verelst (the translator of " After Dinner Stories," from Balzac), and preceded by an introduction from Mr. Edgar Saltus. These tales, which are to appear for the first time in English dress, are regarded as the masterpieces of their respective authors. In the initial story, "Aratar," the reader assists at a metamorphosis more marvellous than any that Cagliostro ever devised; In the companion piece, the "Venus of Ille," will be found that commingling of the matter-of-fact and the impossible which has placed Merrimée's stories on the front shelves of fiction.

GEORGE MUNRO writes to the Tribune, in answer to a charge of intent to deceive the public as to the authorship of "He," that the book in question (" 'He,' by the author of King Solomon's Wives") " is a reprint of an English book published by Messrs. Longmans & Co., of London, who are also the publishers of 'She,' by Mr. H. Rider Haggard, and who therefore cannot very well be accused of any desire or intention, in this publication, of trading upon the name and reputation of Mr. Haggard's book to deceive and defraud the public. We enclose herewith a review of 'He,' which appeared in The Atheneum, of London, of March 12, in which the book is discussed in a dignified and appreciative style and the name of the well-known author, Mr. Andrew Lang, mentioned in connection with it. The title, 'He, by the author of King Solomon's Wives,' certainly suggests a burlesque, and we did not think that a single intelligent person would buy the book under a misapprehension of its character."

Mr. Burnand's latest piece of humor, entitled "The Incompleat Angler," with illustrations by Mr. Harry Furniss. has just been published in London.

CHATTO & WINDUS announce "The Red Spider," by the author of "Mehala;" "Old Blazer's Hero," by Christie Murray, and "Disappeared," by Sarah Tynder.

CHAPMAN & HALL will publish the English edition of M. de Lesseps' reminiscences, extending over a period of forty years, in October next, simultaneously with its appearance in Paris. The work will also appear in German, in the first instance as a serial in one of the Berlin papers.

Mr. JOHN MURRAY has in press a "Dictionary of Hymnology," edited by the Rev. John Julian. The aim of the work is to trace the history of the Christian hymns of all ages, and especially of those now used in English-speaking countries. Biographical notices will be given of the authors of the hymns, besides historical articles on liturgical music generally.

WILL PUBLISH SATURDAY, MAY 21:

HENRY CLAY.

By CARL SCHURZ. Vols. XV. and XVI. in American Statesmen. 2 vols., 16mo, gilt top, $2.50.

Henry Clay was so conspicuous a figure in American politics, and was so intimately connected with the important industrial, financial, and political questions which claimed consideration during the long term of his public life, that he eminently deserves to be included in the list of American Statesmen. Besides he was a man of so large a nature and of so marvellous fascination that his memory is peculiarly dear to multitudes of Americans. The story of his life as related by Mr. Schurz cannot fail to be equally interesting and instructive. The signal ability of Mr. Schurz, his profound understanding of the principles, history, and public men of the United States, and his remarkable candor, assure a work of unusual value.

COLONIAL BALLADS, SONNETS, AND OTHER VERSE.

By MARGARET J. PRESTON, author of "Cartoons," etc. 1 vol., 16mo, gilt top, $1.25.

Mrs. Preston needs no introduction to intelligent readers. Her poetry is thoughtful, lyrical, and altogether wholesome in tone. This new volume cannot fail to attract and richly reward attention.

THE PERSONAL MEMOIRS AND MILITARY HISTORY OF U. S. GRANT vs. THE RECORD OF THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

By Carswell McClellan, Brevet Lieut.-Colonel U. S. Volunteers, Assistant Adjutant-General, and Special Aide on Staff of General Andrew A. Humphreys, June, 1862, to April, 1864. With five maps. 1 vol., crown 8vo, $1.75.

Colonel McClellan, who served on the staffs of both Generals Meade and Humphreys, in this volume aims to correct certain errors in General Grant's Memoir which, he thinks, do grave injustice to those admirable officers. The work is not controversial, or an attack on General Grant, but points out his mistakes and offers ample documentary proofs for their correction.

WAS SHAKESPEARE SHAPLEIGH?

A Correspondence in Two Entanglements. Edited by Justin Winson, Professor of Bibliography in Harvard University. 1 vol., 16mo, 75 cents.

This is a curious addition to Shakespeare literature. It is a careful and ingenious discussion of certain coincidences, which might indicate that possibly Shakespeare was confounded with a Mr. Shapleigh. It is, as its sub-title indicates, an entanglement; and Shakespeare students may take delight in testing their critical skill on it.

THE ENGLISH DRAMATISTS.

THE WORKS OF JOHN MARSTON. Edited by A. H. Bullen, B.A., of the British Museum. In three volumes, 8vo, cloth, $9.00 for the set; large-paper edition, $12.00 net.

Under Mr. Bullen's very competent editorial care this edition of Marston is worthy to be added to the volumes of English Dramatists previously issued in this form—Marlowe in three volumes, and Middleton [in eight. William Hazlitt, the eminent English critic, pronounced Marston "a writer of great merit, who rose to Tragedy from the ground of Comedy, and whose forts was not sympathy either with the stronger or softer emotions, but an impatient scorn and bitter indignation against the follies and vices of men which vented itself either in comic irony or in lofty invective."

AMERICAN TRADE-MARK CASES.

Several volumes of Trade-mark cases and Trade-mark digests have been published from time to time. The last edition of cases is that of Mr. Rowland Cox, published in 1880, and which contains an abstract of all Trade-mark in 1880, and which contains an abstract of all Trade-mark cases reported down to December, 1879. The last digest is that of Coddington, published in 1878.

The present volume is designed to embrace the field of both of the books above mentioned from the date of their publication to the present time. It will contain a complete report of all the reported cases decided by Courts in the United States, both State and Federal, as well as by the Commissioner of Patents, and the briefs of counsel where such have been obtained.

by the Commissioner of Patents, and the briefs of coussel where such have been obtained.

It will also contain a subject digest of law points decided by the cases published. This volume will be of special value to the legal profession in all parts of the country, because the remedies for infringement of trademarks now at the command of trade-mark owners lie entirely in the Equity Courts, both State and Federal, and arise under the common law, except in a few of the States where trade-mark statutes exist. While the Federal statute was in existence the practice in trade-mark cases was confined to the Federal Courts, and in great measure to attorneys making a specialty of practice in those courts; but at present, with such a volume at hand, any State practitioner may with confidence undertake a trade-mark case. A system of reference from digest to syllabus, and from syllabus to section of opinion, has been adopted in printing these cases, which the editors feel will be of material assistance in using the volume.

The cases collected are gathered from almost every State of the Union, and from about one hundred and fifty volumes.

fifty volumes.

Compiled and edited by Benjamin Price and Arthur STEWART, of the Baltimore Bar.

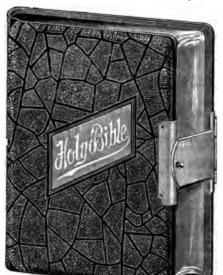

Will make a volume of upwards of 700 pages; will be published in the best Law-Hook style. Price, $7.50. Orders solicited. Edition limited.

MESSRS. CUPPLES & HURD have just ready
"The World as We Saw It," under which title
Mrs. Amos R. Little has, at the request of friends, published the letters she wrote home during a trip around the world. The starting-point was Philadelphia, from whence the party went west to California, across the Pacific to the various South Sea Islands, then to Japan and across Asia into the Holy Land and Africa, across the Mediterranean into Russia, and all through the celebrated cities and places of Europe until ship was again taken for America in the harbor of Liverpool, The publishers have made a handsome book, bound in old gold with gilt scroll decoration. The illustrations are albertypes. They have also just issued, "Yesterdays with Actors," by Catherine Mary Reignolds Winslow, a handsome book filled with portraits and containing interesting personal sketches of numerous actors, including Charlotte Cushman, Edwin Forrest, John Brougham, E. A. Sothern, Laura Keene, J. Wilkes Booth, and others with whom the author has acted at various times in her professional career.

G. P. PUTNAM'S Sons will print at once in their series of Questions of the Day the recent address by Edward Atkinson before the Boston Labor Union, on the subject of "The Margin of Profit, how it is now divided, what part of the present hours of labor can now be spared." With this address will be printed the reply of Mr. E. M. Chamberlain, representing the Labor Union, and Mr. Atkinson's rejoinder to the reply. The volume will contain certain tabular representations analyzing the sources of the product and the division of the product of labor and capital, together with a chart entitled "The Labor Spectrum," which presents the full details of the present division of profits. They also announce "Taxation: its principles and methods," a translation of "First Principles of the Science of Finance," by Prof. Luigi Cossa, of the University of Pavia, with an introduction by Horace White; " Gleanings from Matinecock, and Other Studies, brought together by "John Quod," sketches and stories illustrating the Dutch traditions of Long Island and the banks of the Hudson, and "The Lost Wedding-Ring," a study of present social conditions by "Pixley Winter" and "Little Boy."

ROBERTS BROTHERS will publish at once a new book of social studies by Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton, ranging over such topics as "Rosebuds in Society," "Young Beaux and Old Bachelors," "Engagements," "After Marriage," and other similar vital experiences, which are discussed with exquisite refinement, good sense, and un-failing charm. The book consists of a collection of essays on these social subjects, matters which she is particularly calculated by experience and insight to discuss. Long social experience in the most brilliant circles in her own country and abroad has given her a large fund of observation from which to draw, and the book will be one not only interesting, but suggestive and valuable. "Ourselves and Our Neighbors" is the title of Mrs. Moulton's book. They have just ready "A Week Away from Time," a record of delightful days which some happy summer idlers passed on "the very tip end of the heel of Cape Cod," where time is of no account. It is a kind of modern Decameron, with stories related by the various members, while one member records their daily adventures. It is a charming summer book, and will no doubt find its way into all tourists travelling-bags. They will publish on the 24th "The Alkahest, or, the house of Claes," by Balzac; "The Shaving of Shagpat," by George Meredith; "Cracker Joe," in the No Name series, and "A Week Away from Time."

Articles of purely scriptural history, topography, and exegesis are excluded, and the biographical articles deal with persons only, whose course on earth is ended. The standpoint is, the author says, "as will be naturally expected, that of orthodox Christianity as generally understood by intelligent members of the Church of England." The work, however, has been written in a simply informative rather than dogmatic spirit. The work was undertaken and begun by the late Rev. J. H. Blunt. The scene is laid in New York City. Elias Bacharach, a Jewish artist, falls in love with a young Christian maiden, who charms him for a time into forgetting the teachings of Judaism. The result is a betrothal, of which Elias speaks fearfully to his uncle, the rabbi Gedaza, who contents himself by giving the doctrines of the Thorah on intermarriage, and prophesying that this event will not transpire. The rabbi's prophecy is fulfilled; Elias is seized on his wedding-day by a strange malady which dulls his sensibilities and leaves him a prey to feelings which cause him to forget honor and lose sight of his love for Christine Redwood. With the recovery of his senses comes a knowledge of his loss and the dramatic ending of a novel which gives a very true picture of ending of a novel which gives a very true picture of Jewish life.

"Professor Johnston's 'Connecticut' is a model book, uniting entire accuracy of facts with fearless reason and some literary ability. Professor Johnston, now in the faculty of Princeton College, has placed many students under obligation by his 'History of American politics,' 1879, his 'Genesis of a New England State: Connecticut,' 1884, his edition of the 'Representative American orations,' 1884, his 'History of the United States for schools,' 1886, and his contributions to Mr. Lalor's political encyclopædia. But 'Connecticut' is easily and by far his best book, resting in ample studies and careful reasoning. It is not a mere book of annals and disconnected facts, but a history; and it does not treat Connecticut as a State all by itself, but as the active and powerful member of a great family which we call the United States and mankind."—Boston Beacon.

The aim of the book is to tell the story of one of the greatest men that ever lived, to tell very briefly of his personal achievements, and to show how long his work and how far his influence extended. The rise of Alexander was a great turning-point, when an older volume of history was finished and a new one began. The book history was finished and a new one began. The book begins with him without much retrospect and tells what be founded and what he did for the advance of the world. Important events are selected from the innumerable raids and campaigns, and distinct pictures are left in the reader's mind. About fifty illustrations, good maps, and full index.

Opens with a visit to Ceylon by the overland route in 1841. It is followed by Mr. Oliphant's experiences as traveller and diplomatist in Italy during the revolution of 1848, in Greece, in the United States and Canada, in the Crimean War, in India during the mutiny, and in China during the war of 1857. Then come reminiscences of sporting in Ceylon, an episode with Garibaldi, an adventure in Montenegro, an acount of the attack on the British Legation in Japan, a visit to Poland during the insurrection, to Schleswig-Holstein during the war of 1863, and to the convents in Moldavia. Mr. Oliphant's adventures are innumerable and his manner of telling them compels the reader's strongest interest. them compels the reader's strongest interest.

THE CHATTERBOX DECISION.

THE decision of Judge Shipman in the Estes vs. Worthington case of the great "Chatterbox" series, which, let us hope, is as profitable to the law-book publishers as it is the contrary to the trade at large, strengthens very greatly the fortifications of copyright by trade-mark. In the opinion of Judge Shipman, the endeavor to prove the prior use of the word "Chatterbox" on books of a distinctively juvenile character, which might have estopped claim to it as an individual trademark, did not succeed, so that the case proved to be similar to those in which decisions had already been given in favor of Estes & Lauriat as assignees of the English proprietor. We give the decision in full elsewhere; unless it is overthrown by appeal to a higher court, it will be accepted as a definite statement of the existing law.

Under the line of decisions of which this is the latest, the title of a book assumes new and very great importance. There has always been much doubt as to how far a title itself was subject of copyright, under domestic copyright law; it now proves that the title may be, from a legal point of view, almost the most important part of the book as far as the protection of proprietary rights goes, for it may give protection not only in the home country but in every country with which there are international trade-mark relations. Copyright by trade-mark may become almost more important than copyright proper.

It will not do, however, to rely too much upon this new method of copyright. All the decisions have emphasized very strongly the distinctive appearance and character of the book. its physical form, as defined by the trade-mark title, the result of which might be that while an English Franklin Square Library or Badminton Library or Encyclopædia Britannica could not be published here, if the titles were treated as trade-marks, under the same title and in similar shape, so that the public would be led to mistake one edition for the other, the material could nevertheless be issued in other shape, as in duodecimo instead of octavo, or vice versa. In fact, in the extension of trade-mark law to cover copyright legislation, there are the usual difficulties of indirect law, an indefiniteness that is extremely unsatisfactory. An international copyright would be a much more satisfactory solution.

No one can say that books have lost their practical power in this day and generation. Out of one book by Henry George, "Progress and Poverty," has come a new political party and an international crusade; out of a book by Walter Besant, "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," has come the realization of that People's Palace which was in that book simply a dream. There is nothing more striking in the bearings of letters upon life than the superb reception given to Mr. Besant in East London last week, in which the recognition of the Queen was but an expression of wide popular gratitude. The incident should give publishers and booksellers a strong sense of the dignity of their calling as distributers of thought.

COMMUNICATIONS.

CATALOGUING WOMEN'S NAMES.

To the Editor of the Publishers' Weekly.

DEAR SIR: I should like to ask you three questions:

(1) Why do you index "Ouida's" name (Louise de la Rame) under R? If she is a Frenchwoman, the name should be under L (like La Rochefoucauld); if, as is generally supposed, she is English, it should be under D (like De Quincey). I am unable to guess your reason for putting it under R.

(2) Have you any rule with respect to married women who use, in writing, their maiden names? You write "Mrs. Francis Lean, formerly Miss Florence Marryat." I think "Maclean, Florence (Marryat)," would be better, but this is a question of taste only. But if you deal this way with "Miss Marryat," why not the same with Miss Braddon? But here you use the husband's name as the second or parenthetical one.

(3) You have "Molesworth, Mrs. Mary," why not in full, M., L., or (as in my Directory) M., L. (Stewart)? W. M. GRISWOLD.

1. Rame was adopted as heading on the authority of the Boston Public Library, whose reason was, if we remember right, that Ouida'si father was a Spaniard. The B. P. L. has now, however, decided to consider her as an Englishwoman, and enters her under D.

- 2. See A. L. A. Rules, Lib. Jour., 1878. p. 13: "Married women and other persons who have changed their names are to be put under last authorized form, unless they continue to be known in literature only under their original names." (See also Cutter's Rules, 14. c.) Miss Braddon has not published any of her works except under her maiden name. It is by oversight that she is entered, nevertheless, under Maxwell, her husband's name, in the American Ca:alogue, 1876-84, our general practice being to enter under Braddon.
- 3. An omission. If our bibliographer had consulted Mr. Griswold's valuable "Index" it would not have occurred. [Ed. P. W.]

THE CHATTERBOX DECISION.

FINAL INJUNCTION BY JUDGE SHIPMAN, IN THE CASE OF ESTES vs. WORTHINGTON.

CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

RICHARD WORTHINGTON.

SHIPMAN, J.: This is a bill in equity, to restrain the defendant from the infringing use of the plaintiffs' title "Chatterbox," the said word being alleged to be a well-known trade-mark of the plaintiffs, as assignees of James Johnston, and designating a well-known series of books of a juvenile character which are compiled by the said Johnston and are published in this country by the plaintiffs, and it being alleged that the defendant has imprinted the same trade-mark upon his juvenile publications of substantially the same class, style, and character as those made and issued by said Johnston and the plaintiffs.

The most important facts in the case are stated in the opinions of this Court in the similar cases of Estes vs. Williams, 21 Fed. Rep. 189, and Estes vs. Leslie, 27 Fed. Rep. 23.

In addition to the fact that James Johnston assigned to the plaintiffs the exclusive use in this country and in Canada of the name "Chatterbox" for the term of ten years from January 1, 1880, he also agreed to furnish for said ten years, and has furnished to the plaintiffs since the date of said agreement, duplicate electrotype plates of all his juvenile books bearing said name and containing the same illustrations and reading-matter, which have been issued simultaneously in London by the said Johnston, and in Boston by the plaintiffs. In 1884, the agreement was modified, so as to provide that the privileges previously assigned and promised should be enjoyed for such time as the plaintiffs should pay therefor $1000 per annum.

Johnston was the originator, in the year 1866, of the title "Chatterbox" upon a continuous annual series of books, which he caused to be compiled, containing illustrations and stories of a class and style adapted to young persons; his series called "Chatterbox" has become widely known and very popular in England and in this country, and his "Chatterbox" books have had a distinctive title or name, appearance, style, and manner of cover and of printing which caused them to be universally recognized as the books which had attained and had maintained a well-known and highly appreciated character.

The effort of the defendant to show that the title "Chatterbox" had been appropriated before Johnston's time to a series of publications or works of a juvenile character has failed. In 1852 a monthly newspaper, of an unrefined and coarse character, called the Chatteris Chatterbox, was published for two successive months in the English town of Chatteris. It was not designed for the use of the young. Miss Jane Taylor and her sister Miss Ann Taylor published, in the year 1807, in a volume of poems called "Original Poems for Infant Minds," a poem of five verses called "The Chatterbox," and a book published in this country in 1861 called "The Favorite Scholar" contained a prose story called "Little Chatterbox." These instances of the use of the word do not show an appropriation of the name to a series of books of juvenile character for the purpose of characterizing the series, as the name was applied by Johnston.

By association, this title, when used upon juvenile books of illustrations and stories, pointed "distinctively to the origin or ownership" of the books to which it was applied, and the name has acquired "an understood reference" to the English series, whose character had become widely known (Canal Co. vs. Clark, 13 Wall. 311; Manufacturing Co. vs. Trainor, 101 U. S. 51.)

The defendant has published or caused to be published divers juvenile books, of which "Complainants' Exhibit Worthington Chatterbox" A to K are examples, which bear upon the covers the name or title Chatterbox, and which, some in a greater degree than others, strive to imitate the external appearance and the general style and manner of cover of the plaintiffs' books, and simulate the appearance and decoration of the plaintiffs' Chatterbox series, but do not contain the contents of their books. Such use of the name, especially as it is coupled with an imitation of the general external appearance, manner of cover and of decoration of the plaintiffs' books, shows clearly that the defendant has unfairly attempted to make use of the reputation which the Johnston series had acquired, by deceiving the public into the belief that in purchasing the defendant's books, it was buying the compilations which Johnston had rendered acceptable and popular. Instead of acquiring for himself a reputation by the skill, good taste, and superiority of his own compilations, the defendant has endeavored, by the unwarranted use of the name which Johnston had appropriated, to obtain some portion of the pecuniary advantage which belongs to the reputation which the latter had gained.

The use by the defendant of the name Chatterbox upon the books which are represented by the plaintiffs' exhibits in this case or upon similar books, of a juvenile character, of the general appearance and style of the plaintiffs' books, and from presenting to the public for sale juvenile publications with the use of the title Chatterbox, and thereby leading the public to believe that they are the publications of the plaintiffs, should

John L. S. Roberts and Geo. G. Frelinghuysen for the plaintiffs. George A. Black, for the defendant.

LITERARY PROPERTY AND INTERNA-TIONAL COPYRIGHT.

BY GEORGE HAVEN PUTNAM.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED APRIL 2, 1887, BEFORE THE LIBRARY SCHOOL OF COLUMBIA COLLEGE.

[Concluded.]

AMERICAN authors are manufacturers who are simply asking, first, that they shall not be undersold in their home market by goods imported from abroad on which no (ownership) duty has been paid, which have, namely, been simply "appropriated;" and secondly, that the Government may facilitate their efforts to secure a sale for their own goods in foreign markets. are claims with which a protectionist who is interested in developing American industry ought certainly to be in sympathy. The contingency that troubles him, however, is the possibility that, if the English author is given the right to sell his books in this country, the copies sold may, to some extent, be manufactured in England, and the business of making these copies may be lost to American printers, binders, and papermen. He is, namely, much more concerned for the protection of the makers of the material casing of the book, than for that of the author who creates its essential substance. protectionists who have expressed themselves in favor of an international copyright measure, have insisted upon the condition that foreign works, to be entitled to copyright, must be wholly remanufactured in this country. It is evidently, however, in the interest of the consumer, that the labor of preparing the editions of his books be economized as much as possible. The principal item of cost of the first edition of a book is the setting of the type, to which, if the work be illustrated, must be added the designing and engraving of the illustrations. If this first cost of stereotypying and engraving can be divided between the editions for several countries it is evident that the proportion to be charged to each copy is less and that the selling price per copy can be smaller than would be the case if the outlay has got to be repeated in full for each market. It is then to the advantage of the consumer that, whatever copyright arrangement be made, nothing shall stand in the way of foreign stereotypes and illustrations being duplicated for use here, whenever the foreign edition is in such shape as to render this duplicating an advantage and a saving in cost. The foreign author has, on his part, a right to object to such a remanufacturing condition, because in increasing materially the outlay to be incurred by the American publisher in the production of his edition, it proportionately diminishes the profits or prospects of profits from which is calculated the remuneration that can be paid to the author. One of the plans (originating, I believe, in the West) for an international copyright provided that the foreign book could be reprinted by all dealers who would contract to pay to the author a specified royalty. Such a measure has at first sight something specious and plausible about it, if only because it appears to be in harmony with the principle of freedom of trade. It is, however, directly opposed to those principles. In the first place, it impairs the freedom of contract, preventing the author from making such arrangements for supplying the public as seem to him best; and, secondly, it undertakes by paternal legislation to fix the remuneration that shall be given to the producer for his work and to limit the prices at which this work shall be furnished to the consumer. There is no more equity in the Government's undertaking the limitation of the producer and protection of the consumer in the case of books than there would be in that of bread or beef. Further, such an arrangement would be of benefit to neither the author, the public, nor the publishers, and would, I believe, make of international copyright and of any copyright a confusing and futile absurdity.

A foreign author could hardly obtain much satisfaction from an arrangement which, while preventing him from placing his American business in the hands of a publishing-house selected by himself, and of whose responsibility he could assure himself, and which would throw open the use of his property to any dealers who might choose to scramble for it. The author could exercise no control over the style, the shape, or the accuracy of his American editions; could have no trustworthy information as to the number of copies the various editions contain; and if he were tenacious as to the collection of the royalties to which he was entitled, he would be able in many cases to enforce his claims only through innumerable lawsuits, and he would find the expenses of the collections exceed the receipts. In fact, the business of reprinting would fall largely into the hands of irresponsible parties, from whom no copyright could be collected. benefit to the public would be no more apparent; any gain in the cheapness of the editions produced would be more than offset by their unsatisfactoriness; books so printed would, in the majority of cases, be untrustworthy as to accuracy or completeness, and be hastily and flimsily manufactured. A number of enterprises, also, desirable in themselves and that would be of service to the public, no publisher could, under such an arrangement, afford to undertake at all, as, if they met with any measure of success, unscrupulous competitors would, through rival editions, reap the benefit of his judgment and of his advertis-The injustice of this would become especially manifest in connection with that class of undertakings which are planned, not by the authors, but by the publishers, and from which the latter ought, therefore, to be in a position to reap the full advantages of their own creative initiation. The arguments against a measure permitting open reprinting are in fact the arguments in favor of international copyright. very conclusive statement of the case against the equity of desirability from any point of view of such an arrangement in regard to home copyright was made before the British Commission in 1877 by Herbert Spencer.

The recommendation had been made that, for

The recommendation had been made that, for the purpose of securing cheap books for the people, the law should give to all dealers the privilege of printing an author's books, and should fix copyright to be paid to the author that would secure for him a fair profit for his work. Mr. Spencer objected that

First.—This would be a direct interference with the laws of trade, under which the author had the right to make his own bargain.

Second.—No legislature was competent to determine what was a fair rate of profit for an author (an objection equally binding in my mind to the management by the legislature of tariff systems for the protection of business).

Third.—No average royalty could be determined which could give a fair recompense for the different amounts and kinds of labor given to the production of different classes of books.

Fourth.-If the legislature has the right to fix the profits of the author, it has an equal right to determine that of his associate in the publication, the publisher; and if of the publisher, then also of the printer, the binder, and paper-maker, who all have an interest in the undertaking. Such a right of control would apply with equal force to manufacturers of other articles of importance to the community, and would not be in accord with the present theories of the functions of government.

Fifth.—If books are to be cheapened by such a measure, it must be at the expense of some portion of the profits now going to the authors and publishers; the assumption is that book producers and distributers do not understand their business, but require to be instructed by the State how to carry it on, and that the publishing business alone requires to have its returns regulated by law.

Sixth.—The prices of the best books would, in many cases, instead of being lessened, be higher than at present, because the publishers would require some insurance against the risk of rival editions and because they would make their first editions smaller, and the first cost would have to be divided among a less number of copies. duction of prices as would be made, would be on the flimsier and more popular literature, and even in this could not be lasting.

Seventh.-For the enterprises of the most lasting importance to the public, requiring considerable investment of time and capital, the publishers require to be assured of return from the largest market possible, and without such security, enterprises of this character could not be undertaken at all.

Eighth.—Open competition of this kind would in the end result in crushing out the smaller publishers and in concentrating the business in the hands of a few houses whose purses had been long enough to carry them through the long and unprofitable contests that would certainly be the first effects of such legislation.

These considerations were presented by Mr. Spencer with reference to open domestic publishing, but they apply with equal force to open international publishing, while they are also pertinent arguments in behalf of international copyright.

During the Congressional session of 1886, two bills to secure international copyright were introduced in the Senate, one by Senator Hawley and the other by Senator Chace.

The Hawley bill represented the views of the authors' association and provided simply for extending to foreign authors all rights now possessed by American authors, with the single condition that, in the countries of the writers receiving such privileges, American authors should be accorded the same property rights as domestic authors.

The Chace bill added the limitation or condition that the work of the foreign author, to be entitled to protection, must be published in an American edition which had been printed and bound in the United States.

The latter measure was favorably reported to the Senate by the committee charged with it and was then pigeon-holed, as has been the fate of so many previous measures. Under a sufficient pressure of public opinion, it can of course be revised, and it ought to prove practicable to demand and to secure for it from the next Congress favorable attention.

Copyright unhampered by any manufacturing restrictions is what must finally be arrived at, but as long as the national policy continues to be controlled by the protectionists, no such measure stands any chance of securing the necessary majority in the two houses.

The manufacturing condition imposed by the Chace bill would not prevent the measure from being a most important step forward in behalf of the rights of authors on both sides of the Atlantic. The main thing is to secure a practical recognition of the principle that literary property is not limited by national boundaries. There would be little difficulty later in adjusting and simplifying details and in removing unnecessary restrictions.

The manufacturing provision would also have certain immediate contingent advantages for Without such a restriction, American readers. the English publisher, being put in control of both markets for his books, would, for a time at least, until he had mastered the peculiar conditions of bookselling in the United States, be tempted to experiment with American readers, and, following the English practice, would delay issuing the popular editions of an important work for a year or so until he had seen how many copies he could sell here of the first and high-priced edition. the end, such difficulty would disappear under the ordinary conditions of trade, the English publisher would familiarize himself with the requirements of our market, and would learn to provide promptly cheap editions called for by our readers. But for a year or two, while conservative publishers like Murray and Bentley were acquiring their experience, American bookbuyers might easily be caused friction and annoyance that would bring into disfavor the whole idea of international copy-Under a manufacturing condition, on the right. other hand, the publishers controlling or representing the copyrights would be under the necessity of printing at once editions specially planned for the wants of American readers

The recent international conference called at Berne under the initiative of the government of Switzerland has brought into harmonious union, on the simple ground of "general recognition of the property rights of authors in their own creations," all of the literature-producing nations with the single exception of the United States. Under the Convention completed in September last each nation agrees to give to the authors of each other nation the same recognition and protection that it accords to its own.

This Convention represents the highest development of the idea of literary property. It is the natural result of the tendency which has exerted an increasing influence from the time of the previously quoted decision of Gaius in the second century.

It has taken seventeen hundred years to educate to this point the sense of justice of readers in Europe, or to be exact I must say of Europe and Africa, for among the signers to the Convention of Berne are the representatives of Tunis and

Our Western hemisphere is also not left entirely outside of literary civilization, for the colored republicans of Hayti joined with their cousins of Liberia and with the Moors of Tunis in taking part in the Convention.

The United States are left practically alone with their own standard of literary ethics, like the alligator on the banks of the Mississippi, "an epic self-contained," a law unto themselves. But possibly, with a vigorous effort, we may in the course of time pull ourselves up to the higher standard of Liberia and Hayti.

I trust that the members of the Library School will be prepared to do their part towards the educating of public opinion and of legislative opinion, and that the date may not be distant when this reproach shall be removed from the land.

Said Artemus Ward, slightly paraphrasing the Declaration of Independence, "All men are born, some men are a darned sight too free." Let us not be content to permit this to stand as an accurate description of the citizens of our republic, nor continue to assert that the moral and mental development of our nation is dependent upon the free exercise of the privilege of appropriating our neighbors' books.

In closing this hasty survey, I will ask the attention of my hearers for a moment to the consideration of a matter which has interest as bearing upon the production of literary property. is from year to year becoming of increasing importance that this country should possess the advantage of publication funds, to be utilized in bringing before the public works which are of scholastic or scientific importance, but which are not fitted to secure a popular or remunerative sale, and the publication of which can, therefore, not be undertaken as a business investment. England the most important of such publication foundations is that famous under the title of the Clarendon Press, which is associated with the University of Oxford, and the issues of which cover a wide range of works of higher scholar-

A similar publishing concern known as the Pitt Press, is connected with the University of Cambridge, and with these may be named a long list of societies which provide funds for the publication of works in special lines of investigation, such as the Early English Text Society, the Philological Association, the Palestine Exploration Society, the rival Shakespeare societies, the Camden Society, the Linnean Society, etc., etc.

I am inclined to think that in England no work of assured scholarly value, and which makes any pertinent addition to the literature of its subject, however special its range, and however limited its probable sale, need, for want of funds for its production, remain unprinted and therefore unavailable for the students who can be benefited by it.

In this country, however, such special publishing channels hardly exist, and the funds that are available for the issue of works in special scholarship are inconsiderable enough. The Smithsonian Institution has a list of such works, some of them of marked importance, works which have as a rule been well enough printed, but which have certainly not, in the widest sense of the word, been published.

Excellent work is being done by the active scholars in Johns Hopkins University in furthering the publication of the results of special lines of investigation, work which is only limited by the small amount of money available for the purpose. The new American Historical Association has laid out for itself a good programme, and the Geographical Association has for years been doing its part in a quiet way, while in Massachusetts and some other States there are one or two active societies devoted to local subjects. The fact remains, nevertheless, that it is perfectly possible for a work of high scholarship and lasting importance, a work which would teach the teachers, to be produced by an American writer, which for want of some publishing fund to insure against the probable deficiency, must remain unprinted. The author has been willing, without hope of pecuniary reward, to contribute his time and his labor, but even if he has the means, he ought not to be taxed further

Publishers cannot, if they would, provide any continued investments in missionary work for higher scholarship, nor does such responsibility properly belong to them. Every scholar who has prepared a work of this class, the value of which can be made clear, ought to be able to place it before a Commission charged with the administration of a Trust Publishing Fund. Such funds could most properly be placed under university control, or at least connected with the university organizations, the faculty always being fully represented among the trustees or publication com-And in order to secure for each dollar mittees. of the annual fund available the largest possible amount of book production, the Committee should not undertake to establish publishing machinery of their own, but, following the example of the Clarendon Press and Pitt Press, should arrange to reach the public through publishing machinery already in existence.

I trust that at no distant date future donations or bequests may render it practicable for the venerable and enterprising university under whose auspices this Library School has been organized still further to extend its good work in behalf of higher education by the establishing of The Columbia Press.

THE TAUCHNITZ EDITIONS.

From the Cornhill Magazine.

BARON TAUCHNITZ of Leipzig has issued a jubilee volume ("Fünfzig Jahre der Verlagshandlung Bernhard Tauchnitz") in commemoration of his fifty years' connection with English authors. seems but yesterday that he published a somewhat similar record on the appearance of his two thousandth volume, but in the meantime his collection has been increased by 500 works. A hundred and sixty-five of the whole series have been contributed by American authors, thirty of whom have served under the Baron's banner. His English host numbers no less than 276. There is a notion abroad, or rather at home, that English authors derive no pecuniary advantage from their connection with the great Leipzig firm, but it is due to Baron Tauchnitz to acknowledge that he has always remunerated them, even before the existence of international copyright, and when there was no legal necessity for him to do so. In literary matters it is not necessary to be poor and honest; one may be honest and still successful, and the Baron's case is a case in point. The volume is by no means a mere catalogue of names famous in literature; they are all there, of course, but the series is being constantly supplemented by new authors, and upon the whole with a judgment that does credit to the recruiting sergeant. The popularity of a writer in his own country of course insures his appearance in the Tauchnitz edition, but in not a few cases Leipzig has recognized his merits even before London, and this recognition stamps him with the hall-mark of success.

It is popularly supposed that the Baron'a Continental series is read only by the travelling English, yet these form but a small portion of its public; it is exported everywhere except to England and English colonies. The author himself upon signing a certain formula to satisfy the custom-house, can procure as many copies as he pleases; but every one else who imports a copy into England breaks the law. He also hurts the English author, but I am sorry to say this does not weigh much with the British traveller, who finds the Tauchnits edition, he says "so handy -so easy, he also means, to smuggle. We have seen a whole library of Tauchnitz editions—though not, of course, his own books-in a publisher's drawing-room. It is the ladies, however, who are the greatest sinners in this way. A charming young literary smuggler was bringing home with her a Tauchnitz novel from Antwerp the other day, and made acquaintance with an agreeable stranger on the way, to whom she confided her nefarious intention. At London Bridge he reciprocated her frankness by informing her that he was a custom-house officer, and demanding that the volume should be given up.

"But I have not finished it yet," she murmured pleadingly.

"Where have you got to?" he inquired.

She pointed with her taper finger. Gently taking the book from the fair contrabandist, he tore away what she had read and threw it in the river, returning the portion that was so precious to her with the customary bow.

It is seldom, indeed, that a book of such modest pretensions has the literary value which this jubilee volume possesses. There are extracts in it from the correspondence of all the famous dead authors, which are in the highest degree interesting. Though confined to one subject, many of them are very characteristic, and certainly go far to disprove the popular notion that the relations between author and publisher must needs be antagonistic. It is well to remember that, though there is now international copyright (as matters now stand, the Tauchnitz editions are as fully established by English law as any other), there was none when Bernhard Tauchnitz first began his undertaking, and that he could have commenced it "without the authority and sanction of English authors.

OBITUARY NOTES.

JAMES GRANT, the novelist, died on the 6th inst., at the age of 64. He was born in 1822 at Edinburgh, where his father was an army officer. From 1832 to 1839 he lived in barracks in Canada, where his father's regiment was then stationed, and on his return to England was himself made an ensign. In 1843 he resigned his commission and devoted himself to literature. first book, "The Romance of War, or, Highlanders in Spain," appeared in 1846, and "The Highlanders in Belgium" followed in 1847. Other works from his pen were: "Adventures of Rob Roy," 1863; "The White Cockade," 1867; "Lady Glendonwynd," 1882: "Jack Chaloner, or, the fighting Forty-third," 1883, and "Miss Cheyne of Essilmont," 1883. These novels attained considerable popularity. Mr. Grant also made the study of Scottish antiquities a specialty, and published three novels of serious value bear-Oueen of Scots," 1851; "Lucy Arden: a tale of 1715," 1859, and "The Master of Aberfeldie," 1884. To complete his bibliography must also be mentioned "British Battles on Land and Sea," 1873-'75; "Old and New Edinburgh," 1880-'83, "Cassell's History of the War in the Souand dan," 1885.

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

ROBERT CLARKE & Co., Cincinnati, will publish "At the Holy Well, with a Handful of New Verses," by John James Piatt.

HAMILTON W. MABIE, who has undertaken to write the biography of Mrs. Jackson ("H. H."), will visit Southern California before he completes the work.

LITTLE, BROWN & Co. have just ready "The New Education," by Prof. George Herbert Palmer, of Harvard, three essays, originally printed in the Andover Review, explaining to non-professional people some recent tendencies in education.

THE article headed "Proposed Increase in Canadian Tariff on Books," reprinted in our last issue, was credited to the wrong source. It was clipped from Geyer's Stationer, to which the credit for authorship belongs.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & Co. will publish early in the fall a hymn and tune book for congregational use, edited by Profs. Harris and Tucker, of Andover, with the coëperation, as musical editor, of E. K. Glezen, of Providence.

THOMAS WHITTAKER has just "issued "The Growth of Church Institutions," by the Rev. Edwin Hatch; "Future Retribution Viewed in the Light of Reason and Revelation," by the Rev. C. A. Row; and the third series of "Expositions," by the Rev. Samuel Cox, D.D.

DAMRELL & UPHAM have reprinted from the Church Review, in pamphlet form, "Naukrates, a Greek city in Egypt," by the Rev. Dr. W. C. Winslow; also "Apostolic Succession, held by Anglican Church," by Rev. Isaac Brock, with an appendix by Rev. Andrew Gray.

In our last issue in the "Weekly Record of New Publications" and order list, Thompson's "Dynamo-Electric Machinery" was erroneously credited to D. Van Nostrand. It was published by E. & F. N. Spon, and was correctly entered in our list in the Publishers' Weekly, January 29, page 173.

E. B. TREAT, New York, announces an enlarged and illustrated edition of "Curiosities of the Bible," by a New York Sunday-school superlatendent, and introduced by Rev. J. H. Vincent, D.D. Also, a revised and enlarged edition of "Woman's Handbook in Health and Disease," by L. C. Warner, M.D.

THE Richard M. Hoe library sale at Bangs & Co.'s, which begins on the 23d inst., lasting three days, will be an important one to publishers and printers. The catalogue comprises three parts; the first contains works relating to printing, the second, scientific works, and the third, general literature. The first part is much the largest, numbering 1433 titles.

Mr. ROBERT GRANT's name appears on the title-page of a new paper edition of that clever novel, "Face to Face," which was anonymously published by the Scribners a year ago. The large success and popularity of the novel in its anonymous form fully justifies the publishers in reissuing it now in their Yellow Paper series with Grant's name attached.

It is announced that within a year we may look for the fourth volume of Schouler's "History of the United States," which will bring the narrative down to the close of the Mexican Wax. This work, says The Nation, "is one of the most important fruits of that return to historic studies which the rooting out of slavery permitted to the generation that survived the war.

In the case of Wm. S Gottsberger vs. The Aldine Book Publishing Company, Mr. Gottsberger testified before Examiner Stetson, of Boston, that he had not sold a single copy of the " Ebers' Gallery" prior to November 16, 1885, this evidence being necessary to sustain the claim of copyright. It was ordered that Mr. Gottsberger produce as evidence all of his books and accounts relating to the "Ebers' Gallery" prior to the date in ques-

On the evening of the 17th inst. the building at No. 4 Park Street, Boston, occupied for the most part by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., was burned out. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. suffer considerable loss on books in their salesroom, many of which were elegantly bound volumes. Fortunately their most valuable documents were at their printing establishment in Cambridge. Their loss will probably reach $15,000 or $20,000; insured.

Ticknor & Co. will publish on the 25th "The Sunny Side of Shadow," by Mr. S. G. W. Benjamin, a series of most delightful little essays and sketches written by a convalescent on the themes naturally suggested by the quiet life of pain, and by the hopefulness of new-born strength; "Letters of Horatio Greenough" to his brother Henry, with biographical sketches, edited by Frances Boott Greenough; a new edition in paper covers of "Nights with Uncle Remus;" and two vol-umes of Feathermann's "Social History of the Races of Mankind," treating of the Nigritians and the Melanesians.

E. & F. N. Spon have in press a volume on "Food Adulteration and its Detection," by Jesse P. Battershall, Chemist United States Laboratory, New York. This work is designed for chemists, health officials, physicians, and those of the general public who are interested in the purity of food and drink. The aim of the author has been to embody in a condensed form an exposition of the present status of food adulteration in the United States. the greater portion of the book is devoted to a scientific treatment of the subject and the chemical methods employed in the detection of adulteration, it is believed that much will be found contained which possesses a more extended interest, especially to manufacturers and dealers in alimentary substances. The fact that, until the present, all authoritative works on food adulteration have been written from foreign standpoints, and therefore have not always been applicable to American needs, will render this work of particular value, at a time when the attention of the public is almost daily being directed to the quality of our food supply. A very important and valuable feature of this book is the incorporation of photogravures or artotypes (executed by Mr. Edwin Bierstadt), the majority of which represent the results of microscopical research. A complete list of the public reports, periodicals, and general and special works on food adulteration, together with full copies of the National and State laws relating to the subject, form the Appendix, which may safely be claimed to be unique in this respect.

SAMUEL CARSON & Co., 3 Sansome St., San Francisco, announce that the subscriptions already received for the "History of the College of California" (fully described in our columns last November) justify them in putting the work in I press at once. The book will be ready for subscribers probably within sixty days. But a limited edition will be printed from type, and after subscribers have been supplied the price will be raised. The work has been written by the Rev. Samuel H. Willey, who has had at hand all the original records and documents. A special feature of value in the volume will be a choice selection of the anniversary addresses and commencement orations delivered by such men as Bishop Kip, John B. Felton, Rev. Thos. Starr King, Professor Benjamin Silliman, Rev. Dr. I. E. Dwinelle, Rev. Dr. A. L. Stone, Rev. J. A. Benton, Professor Henry Durant and many others. There will be also selections from the published proceedings of "the Associated Alumni of the Pacific," recalling the happy times and bright speeches of those cheerful occasions. At the close will be found the names of all those who served as trustees; the names of members of the faculty, and instructors, and the names of the graduates as they follow each other from year to year. It will make a volume of 400 pages, crown octavo, and will be published in the very best style of the art of bookmaking, so that the book shall be a creditable monument to the institution whose history it is intended to commemorate,

THE second series of "Obiter Dicta," which will be issued by Elliot Stock, London, almost immediately, with the author's name, will contain two somewhat extended papers on Milton and Pope.

MACMILLAN & Co. have under way a new novel by the author of "Hogan, M.P.," and of "Flitters, Tatters, and the Counsellor." It deals mainly with country life in Ireland at the present day, and will be entitled "Ismay's Children." They also announce a little volume of "Italian and Spanish Folk Songs," selected and translated by A. G. V. Strettell, illustrated with photogravures from drawings by E. A. Abbey, V. S. Sargent, and W. Padgett.

A BEGINNING has been made, says the Academy, with the proposed English Dialect Dictionary, the Rev. A. Smythe Palmer, the author of "A Word-hunter's Note-book," having been appointed editor and an appeal issued for funds to complete the undertaking. Prof. Skeat has accepted the duties of treasurer and secretary, as it has been deemed desirable to form a separate organization for the carrying out of the preparation of the dictionary, leaving the English Dialect Society to pursue its own work as heretofore. It is estimated that at least £5000 will be required. The majority of those who have promised subscriptions will spread the payment over five years. The printing and publication of the dictionary will be undertaken by the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press.

A SALESMAN in a leading book-store on Washington St., Boston, noted for his persistency and persuasiveness, was endeavoring to sell Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes a large-paper copy of "Nell Gwynne, when the following conversation ensued:

"Doctor, can't I sell you a copy of this 'Nell Gwynne?'"

"Which 'Nell Gwynne'?" innocently (?) asked

"Why, the 'Nell Gwynne' of Charles the Sec. ond," said the salesman, readily.

"Indeed!" said the doctor, quietly, as he slowly sauntered from the premises.

PUBLISHED BY

SEASON OF 1887.

To RETAIL DEALERS:

The Summer Catalogue, issued now for ten years, has been found so useful and profitable by enterprising dealers, that it has become a regular feature of the trade. The eleventh issue, in a special pamphlet adapted for imprint circulation all through the summer, will be published in connection with The Publishers' Weekly, early in June.

The imprint editions will contain, in addition to a catalogue of guide-books and light literature for summer reading, an entirely new selection of reading-matter both of a practical and entertaining character, chiefly intended for the use and amusement of tourists, pleasure-seckers, and visitors of summer resorts.

Booksellers should remember that, while summer is usually a dull time, the sales of light literature, etc., can be pushed to make a successful business even in this season. The casses who travel are of course those who have money to spend, even in dull times, and the summer is the time when very many bookbuyers do the greater part of their reading. The tide of travel this year is likely to set toward home resorts, instead of across sea. Booksellers at or near summer resorts should therefore especially avail themselves of this publication, while city dealers should remember that it will be also useful to tempt stay-athomes to make investments or to follow up customers otherwise out of reach.

IF Orders for imprint editions at subscription rates should be sent in at once.

The Great Hesper.

A Romance. By Frank Barrett. 12mo, paper cover, 25 cents.

"The Great Hesper" (which is a wonderful story of a wonderful diamond) introduces to the world of readers a character entirely new to fiction. "What is a Nyctalops?" will soon be one of the leading questions of the day. The answer is to be found in the startling, the perplexing, the strange story of "The Great Hesper."

JOBBING SEASON, 1887.

E. P. DUTTON & COMPANY,

NEW YORK,

Will have ready June 1st their ENTIRELY NEW and ELEGANT LINE of HOLIDAY PUBLICATIONS, of both Domestic and Foreign Manufacture.

As usual we offer the most beautiful and most salable COLOR books in the market. Those who lost sales and money last year by not having bought enough "All Around the Clock," when they could get it, should profit by their experience, and when our new color-books are shown them this season, order enough to at least last them until Christmas week.

The novelty we originated and introduced last year (Season Songs and Sketches—Spring, Summer, Autumn, and Winter) proved such an instantaneous success in every part of the country, that we have made Mono-tint books a leading feature in our line for the coming season. Success is always followed by inferior imitations, and we trust the trade will refrain from placing orders for so-called Mono-tint books until they see our line. It is an undisputed and acknowledged fact that our German lithographer, E. Nister, has no equal as a printer in color and mono-tint.

MONO-TINT BOOKS.

 These books are printed in from four to seven tints and type. All are bound in attractive light-tinted Dalton covers, printed in bright colors, with rounded corners, gilt edges, and gold cord tied in a bow, and warranted strongly bound, very neatly wrapped and put up in dozens, and all above the 25-cent line will come each book in a handsome wrapper printed in mono-tint.

ENOCH ARDEN. Uniform with "The Day Dream."
Two artists visited the Isle of Wight, where the scene of this great poem is laid, for the express purpose of taking sketches on the spot. "The Day Dream" was considered the greatest artistic success of the season of 1885. We predict for Enoch Arden a still greater hit. Large quarto, cloth gilt, $6.00; Japanese antique, calf limp, ¥7.50.

THE DAY DREAM. With original illustrations by Harry Fenn, W. J. Fenn, Wm. St. John Harper, E. H. Garrett, and other celebrated artists, and decorative pages in a new style of monochrome, which adds greatly to the charm of the wood-cuts. Quarto, 170 pages, cloth, with original stamped designs, $6.00; Japanese antique calf, $7.50.

REDUCTION IN PRICE.

Our celebrated series of illustrated Hymns and Poems. Grandma's Attic Treasures, The Raven, Sweet By and Ry. Rells Across the Snow, etc., etc., 13 vols., reduced both in cloth and leather to $1.25 per vol. The new leather this year, we predict, will be a greater hit than the Japanese calf was last year, and can only be obtained in our line.

Cheap Line of Illustrated Quartos.

IMITATION CALF can hardly be distinguished when lying on a counter from the best polished German calf. We make 12 volumes of our quartos in this series. Retail price per volume, 75 cents.

NOTES IN SEASON.

THE WORTHINGTON COMPANY will publish next week a selection of Algernon Charles Swinburne's poetical works which the author has been urged for years to make. It will fully represent Mr. Swinburne's poetical works from "Atlanta" onwards. They will also publish at the same time Prof. Proctor's long-promised book on "Chance and Luck," in which the author has formulated his theories about the average chances of gambling, shares, wagers, lotteries, etc., reducing all such chances to certain laws of luck, which he claims to have studied with the same accurate attention he has given to his astronomical calculations.

LEE & SHEPARD will publish at once what may be considered a novelty in the book line. It is entitled "The Obelisk and Its Voices," a little book, styled by Mr. Winthrop as both memorable and memorial, giving a description of impressions made upon the mind of the author, Gen. Henry B. Carrington, U. S. A., during an ascent of the Washington Monument, Feb. 22, this year. The right-hand pages form the poem. The pages on the left have Washington memorabilia and illustrations, including two portraits and a sketch of men now at work "intoning granite" within the obelisk. The cover has an arabesque margin, into which are wrought the names of continents contributing stones, and of all the Presidents, as well as of leading statesmen of the country. It is fitly and graciously dedicated to Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, of Massachusetts, who was the orator both at the corner-stone and dedication ceremonies, the date being May 12, his seventy-ninth birthday. Messrs. Lee & Shepard have also nearly ready a new edition of J. F. Clarke's "Life and Times of Jesus, as Related by Thomas Didymus." A new edition of the Rev. A. P. Peabody's "Harvard Lectures on Moral Philosophy." will shortly be issued under the title of "Christian Morals." change of title has been deemed necessary to distinguish it from one of the author's earlier works.

E. P. DUTTON & Co. announce in our advertising pages this week their full line of holiday publications. Samples of nearly all of these will be ready early in June. Color-books, and finely illustrated art-books, as in former years, form the bulk of the list. In the former they have so far decidedly had the lead, the best test of this. assertion being that they never were able to meet. fully the demand for such books as "All Around the Clock," and "Through the Meadows." This year the leading fine art color-book will be "Queen of the Meadow," by Harriet M. Bennett, author of "All Around the Clock." Their prominent holiday gift-book will be "Enoch Arden," handsomely illustrated with fine wood-engrav-Two artists visited the Isle of Wight, where the scene of the poem is laid, for the express purpose of taking sketches on the spot. The work has been under the special supervision of Geo. T. Andrew. They also promise a story to be entitled "His Little Royal Highness," by a new and unknown American author, with illustrations printed by Nister. This is not in any way an imitation of "Little Lord Fauntleroy, having been written and in Messrs. Dutton's hands long before that story first appeared in St. Nicholas. They also promise some decided novelties in the line of bindings, designed by the same artist whose Japanese call bindings prove so successful last year.

A specially good addition to the neat and cheap series of novels the Lippincott Co. are publishing. Mrs. Leith Adams understands young girls, and in this story introduces two very charming ones. The scene is laid in New Brunswick, on the Reed farm. Aunt Hepsy, her servants Samson and Maggie, her neighbors and friends, are well-executed character studies. A candid and unprejudiced view of the Russian people A candid and unprejudiced view of the Russian people and Russian government by a cultivated American. In getting to Russia Mr. Bouton took the indirect route from Paris to Nice, thence to Genoa, Naples, Florence, through Switzerland, lingering in a portion of Germany—Prague, Dresden, Berlin, etc.—of all of these places he gives fresh, original views, that make his book very attractive. The most valuable portion of his travels are those relating to Russia, as they will serve to clear up many misrepresentations emanating from the English press concerning Nihilism and the condition of the people generally, and also the popular feeling towards the Tsar. A duplicate title-page in Russian is a curiosity.

In "The rear-guard of the Revolution," the author traced the career of this remarkable man—John Sevier, one of the original settle s of Tennessee—from his first appearance at Watauga to the close of the Revolutionary strangle. In the present volume he takes up the narrapearance at watauga to the close of the Revolutionary struggle. In the present volume he takes up the narrative where it there left off, and follows his course from the peace of 1783 to the end of his life; during which period, opposed by North Carolina and unaided by the General Government, he built up a great commonwealth in the very heart of the Western wilderness. Mr. Gilmore had access to the same sources and authorities he con-sulted in writing his first work; also some new material was put at his disposal of much value and interest.

Church, while located at Sioux City, was determined to see the law relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors see the law relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors enforced. Being an uncompromising Prohibitionist, and fearless almost to recklessness, he brought upon himself the hatred of the liquor men. He was waylaid at night, August 3, 1886, and shot, it is said, by the foreman of a leading brewery, in pursuance of a confessed conspiracy to assassinate him. The book is written by his son, who, in endeavoring to portray the man growing up into the reformer, subordinates chronology to history.

The lectures illustrate Dr. Hodge's wonderful power of popularizing scientific theology. The subjects treated cover the whole field of theological doctrine, and the treatment is in Dr. Hodge's best vein. The volume is one that not clergymen only but intelligent Christian men and women of the laity will find interesting and instructive. Many topics which are prominent in the discussions of the day, receive ample attention with reference to these discussions. A series of stories which picture life in ole Virginia before, during, and after the rebellion; they are told in the peculiar negro dialect of Eastern Virginia, by some faithful sable adherent who pants the departed glory of "Marster" or "Mistis" in glowing terms, and winds up generally with a heroic deed or touching little love affair. This work was prepared by the author for the purpose of collecting and presenting in a compact form all those recipes and so-called "trade secrets" which have been so extensively advertised and offered for sale. It is not by any means a clap-trap book, though it exposes many clap-traps. It contains a large amount of valuable information that cannot be readily found elsewhere, and it gives not only the formulæ, etc., for manufacturing an immense variety of articles, but important and trustworthy hints as to the best way of making money out of them. The period during which Henry Clay lived was not only one of the most eventful in our national history, but its many antagonizing issues and bitter discussions served to bring into prominence men who only needed the occasion to prove themselves great. He places the hero of his story—Bennie Stout—in positions to exemplify this fact, and to show how a boy of good principle and a strong will can not only resist temporation himself, but can even exert an not only resist temptation himself, but can even exert an influence over his elders.

A TRADE HEADQUARTERS.

WE can't help feeling how unfortunate it is that the book and stationery trades are without a headquarters. The advantages that could be derived from a centre at which the heads of the trade could meet for conference, consultation, or sociable purposes-where the traveller might entertain a visiting customer, where those desiring help, or clerks looking for positions might be accommodated-all these and many other considerations are so evident that it is a wonder the idea has not yet been realized. Mr. Charles S. Plummer some time ago proposed such a headquarters and offered valuable suggestions, but nothing came of it that we are aware of. The undertaking does not look at all formidable. Not only the book and stationery trades, but the many branches of trade that do business with these-as paper-makers, printers, binders, fancy hardware manufacturers, etc., might be drawn into the scheme, as well as the Stationers' Board of Trade and the Provident Association. By the cooperation of all the tax on the individual would be reduced to a minimum, while the advantages derived would be a welcome boon to the trade throughout the country. To illustrate this we will take just one case. A Western bookseller arrives in New York. We suppose he is a stranger and that he has but a day or two to spend in the city. The best part of that time is taken up in finding the places he wants to visit, and very often before he gets half way around he is tired and disgusted and concludes to do the rest of his business by correspondence. Now were there one place at which all houses in the city were represented by samples and wide-awake salesmen.

would not the chances be that that buyer could be induced to make larger purchases, and from more houses than he can now do, running, as he is forced to, from Franklin Square to Twenty-third Street? We should like to see this matter discussed, and will make room in our columns for any suggestions or communications.

THE members of the Booksellers and Stationers' Provident Association are reminded that the annual meeting of their association is to be held at Geo. A. Leavitt Co.'s rooms, 787 Broadway, N. Y., on the evening of June 1, at 8 o'clock P.M. This is an occasion on which every member ought to turn out, if it were for no other purpose than to be sociable and become better acquainted.

Our readers will find elsewhere in this issue a supplement containing the "Summer Catalogue." Dealers again have a chance to judge of its merits and to decide whether an edition with their imprint might not be used to advantage by them in pushing for some extra business during the vacation season. We are able to fill some more orders, provided they reach us promptly.

THE AUSTRALIAN BOOK-TRADE. [Special correspondence of the Publishers' Weekly.]

MAITLAND, NEW SOUTH WALES, April 4, 1887. To the Editor of the Publishers' Weekly.

Most new countries suffer from periods of financial depression, and at present the Australasian Colonies are passing through a very serious period of dull times, the causes of which are variously given. Politics, prolonged droughts, overspeculation, etc., are blamed according to the disposition or business of the speaker; but the real reason is probably to be found in the over-population and development of the cities before there is any corresponding cultivation and improvement in the country districts; the city of Sydney, for instance, containing more than one-third of the entire population of the Colony of New South Wales, there being upwards of twenty other cities and large towns in the colony, the entire population of which is something less than a million.

The book business is always among the first to feel trade depression, and it usually suffers more than some other branches of business-books being, alas! to many people, a luxury which can be done without; and here, to make matters worse, with the dull times has come the cutting of prices, and complaints on this head are as common in Sydney and other Australian cities as they are in the United States. When it is considered that these booksellers are fifteen thousand miles from their sources of supply, that freights are dear, and stocks must be very heavy and well assorted on account of the long time it takes to get out supplies, an idea may be had of the condition of the book-trade at the present time.

In the days before competition was so keen, when books were sold at an advance on publishers' prices, booksellers occasionally became rich, as merchants sometimes do still in other lines of trade, but with the same cutting of prices prevailing as we have in New York or London, and with his heavy freight charges, the Australian book-

can literature is known in the Colonies. Twain is a household word, and many another American writer's works may be seen on the book-shelves of Colonial homes, of course in pirated English editions which pay, for the most | part, no royalty to the American author or publisher — an argument in favor of International Copyright which should appeal strongly to us in the United States.

New South Wales has just passed through the throes of a general election in which one of the principal issues was free-trade or protection, and I am told that Mr. Carnegie's "Triumphant Democracy "was used almost as a campaign document by the protectionists, various statements from it being quoted as unanswerable arguments in favor of a protectionist policy. Curiously enough, however, the free-trade party won by a large majority. Yours sincerely, GEORGE P. BRETT.

BRENTANO BROS. A CORPORATION.

THE house of Brentano Bros. was founded by August Brentano, whose death occurred in Chicago last November, and who came from Ems, Austria, to this country at the age of 23. early taste and education inclined him to books and general literature. His means were small. and he began his career in New York City by selling daily papers in front of the New York Hotel, and from this insignificant beginning began the present house of Brentano Bros. His first store was started at Broadway and Houston St., under the Revere House, in 1856. He removed to 636 Broadway, subsequently to 708 Broadway. Following the advance of trade in its up-town movement, he located, in 1870, at 33 Union Square, then removed to 39, and finally to the present quarters, No. 5 Union Square. The present location is one of the best in New York City, it being in the same block with Tiffany's and other large concerns. In 1887 the nephews of August Brentano-August, Arthur, and Simon Brentano - who had been associated with him, bought out the business, which at that time was not only located in New York, but had established successful branches in Chicago and Washington. By the united and indefatigable efforts of the three brothers the business has grown to very large proportions, so much so that during the last summer they were compelled to enlarge their New York store, by the addition of galleries and rows of shelves, which added considerably to the store's capacity. Yet, in spite of this, they are still crowded for room. The opportunities for the expansion of their establishment have been so great that, after several years of the most careful consideration, they have decided to take advantage of them, and to that end have formed themselves into a corporation under the laws of the State of New York. The company will be limited to the present members of the firm, with the addition of one or two capitalists. and they will hereafter be known under the name of "Brentano's." It is the intention of the concern to carefully extend their business by opening, as opportunity offers, various branches in the leading centres of this country and Europe, with the New York house as headquarters, where all the purchases, etc., will be made, and thence distributed to the various branches. Brentano's establishment is well known in Europe, and their foreign business has developed to a considerable extent within the past few years. Special atten-

I was much surprised to find how well Ameri- I tion will be given to the further development of Mark ; this branch, which will include English, French, German, Spanish, and Italian books, newspapers, and periodicals. of which they already carry a very large stock. While they have never made any special effort as publishers, still they have issued some important publications on special subjects. It is the intention of the house to enter more largely into the field as publishers, with the aim of producing books of the best quality as to literary merit, as well as to their manufacture. They have in view a number of attractions for the fall.

The officers of the concern are: August Breetano, President; Arthur Brentano, Vice-President, and Simon Brentano, Secretary and Tressurer. August Brentano will have general supervision of the business and all its branches; Arthur Brentano will reside abroad, with headquarters in Paris, and will superintend the various branches in Paris, London, Berlin, etc., and buy for the home market, thus giving the house exceptional opportunities for securing all the latest foreign books, novelties, etc., while Simon Brentano will look after the financial department and the accounts. Simon Brentano sailed for Europe on the 14th, partly for pleasure, as well as business in the interest of the new concern, and August Brentano is now in Oregon, making an extensive business trip throughout the West, as far as San Francisco.

A PLEA FOR A HIGHER STANDARD OF PAPER.

From the American Bookmaker.

THERE are two ways of eating a dinner. One is to go to a restaurant or to a so-called table d'hôte and eat what is set before you-a proceeding which calls for not a little faith in your fellowman; the other is to visit the market and buy such food and in such quantity and of such quality as you may desire, and direct that it be sent home to your cook. In the one case you take things on faith; in the other on knowledge and experience. In this sense, why should not the publisher go to the paper-mill with a specific formula in his hand, calling for an absolutely pure linen paper, or for one with a certain proportion of cotton fibre, wood pulp, or chemical fibre, the percentage of clay, too, in each case being specifically stated? He, of all men, knows or ought to know exactly what kind of a paper he needs for a proposed publication; he knows whether he is desirous of building for a day or for all time; whether he is willing to take any chances of having the pages of his book turn yellow or become brittle through the decomposition of cellulose, a danger which threatens all books printed upon paper whose constituents or methods of preparation are not guaranteed to with-stand the tests of time. "True," the publisher may answer, " but I do all this now; for any fine edition I order a linen paper to be specially made for me." "Linen paper" it may be, in that it contains a large percentage of fibre from linen rags; but what is the admixture of other fibre? How much cotton, how much wood pulp, how much chemical fibre, how much clay? Or still further, how was the stock prepared, and in what way was it worked up to perfection? The Post-Office Department of our government furnishes the formula for the paper to be used in making the official envelopes of the postal service, and it is present at the mill in the person of an agent.

who has the right to inspect the product in all of the "several stages" of manufacture. the last quarter century dictionaries, encyclopædias, and other works of reference have been printed upon paper containing admixtures of stock which render it too brittle to withstand even ordinary usage, to say nothing of the severe tests put upon it in our libraries and reading-rooms. The daily press might, with great propriety, take the lead in this reform. Every student knows that the files of our daily journals soon fall to pieces and become literally books of shreds and patches. Why would it not be well to run off a few hundred copies of every issue on paper which would reasonably secure their preservation as public records in our libraries, reading-rooms, and institutions of learning? Why should not the government exact a standard of quality and the use of material which would preserve its printed archives from generation to generation, and make them as enduring memorials as the records which have come down to us through the course of hundreds of years? It is possible to have all this, and while the cheapening process is going on it would be well not to forget that our duty to posterity is a duty to ourselves as well.

CORRECT METHOD OF INTERLEAVING A BOOK.

HARDLY a day passes that a student or bookman does not want either to add one or more leaves to some book, either blank for purposes of annotation or printed with or without cuts, to supplement the subject treated or some particu-lar branch of it, or to "grangerize" the work in in a small way. Robert Luce, one of the editors of The Writer, the new Boston journal for literary workers, calls attention to the right and wrong way of interleaving a book in the following words: "Most men when they want to insert a leaf in a book put mucilage on both sides of the leaf's inner edge, put it in the desired place, shut the book, and let the mucilage dry. Afterward, when they come to use the book, they find it hard to read the words at the very inside of the pages. and later on they wonder why that leaf will not stay stuck in. The difficulties can be ob-viated very easily. When you wish to insert a leaf, turn over a third or a half-inch of the edge Put the mucilage only on the outof the paper. er side of the little flap thus made, taking care to get none on the rest of the paper. Then insert the leaf and shut the book. When it is opened, if the outer edges of the sheet have been trimmed, it will be found to all intents and purposes a new leaf.'

It should be added that if a printed page or cut has not sufficient inner margin to turn over for a flap, this defect may be very readily remedied by pasting or gluing a strip of thin, tough paper to the page to be used as a flap.

The publishing business in London is undergoing a revolution. Mudie and the other big London houses swallowed up the local circulating libraries and absorbed and fostered the system of loaning books published in the expensive three-volume form, but they themselves are now threatened with extinction by the new tendency towards the publication of novels in one volume and with cheap paper covers, which makes it possible to buy the books for less than a library subscription costs during the year.

SOME OF THE BEST ENGLISH NOVELS.

The Pall Mall Gazette at last announces the result of its competition in regard to the best novels. "We did not," it says, 'expressly limit the competition to English novels, but our readers have been patriotic, and hardly a single foreign book appears in the lists. The result may be taken, therefore, as embodying the current opinion of the day on English novels and novelists: I. The best historical novel, Scott, 'Ivanhoe.' 2. The best humorous novel, Dickens, 'Pickwick.' 3. The most imaginative romance, Rider Haggard, 'She.' 4. The best 'novel with a purpose,' Charles Reade, 'Never too Late to Mend.' 5. The best tale of seafaring life, Marryat, 'Midshipman Easy.' 6. The best tale of country life, George Eliot, 'Adam Bede.' 7. The best sensational novel, Wilkie Collins, 'Woman in White.' 8. The best tale for boys, Defoe, 'Robinson Crusoe.' 9. The best Irish novel, Lever, 'Charles O'Malley.' 10. The best Scotth novel, Scott, 'The Heart of Midlothian.' 11. The best novel of all, Thackeray, 'Vanity Fair.'"

HORN-BOOKS.

From the Christian at Work.

ONE of the rarest, and certainly one of the most interesting books in the library of the British Museum, is what our ancestors called a "hornbook." It was, in fact, their primer, the ordinary means by which they began their education; and down to the reign of George II. must have been very common, for we see by an entry in the account-book of the Archer family, that one was sold in 1729 for twopence. At present there is no book more difficult to obtain. The one in the British Museum was found a quarter of a century ago in a deep closet, built in the thick walls of an old farm-house in Derbyshire. It is said a laborer engaged in pulling down the walls of the ancient house recognized it as that from which his father had been taught to read. Upon the back is a picture of Charles I. on horseback, giving some approximation to its date. It is a single leaf, containing upon the front side the alphabet, large and small, in Old English and Roman letters, ten short columns of monosyllables founded on the vowels, and the Lord's Prayer; all set in a frame of oak, now black with age, and protected by a slice of transparent horn, hence the name horn-

There is a handle by which to hold it, and in the handle a hole for a string, so it could hang from the girdle. A picture of 1720 represents a child running in leading-strings with a horn-book tied to her side. A cheaper kind of horn-book had the leaf of printed paper pasted upon the horn, and perhaps the greater number were made in this way. If so, it is not singular that they should be scarce, for they would be very easily destroyed. Shenstone writes in 1742 of

"Book of stature small, While with pellucid horn secured all To save from fingers wet the letters fair."

The alphabet upon the horn-books was always headed by a cross, and so was frequently called the Christ Cross Row, or, in common speech, the Criss Cross Row, this being the title under which a very worn specimen is catalogued at Oxford.

HINTS TO FANCY GOODS DEALERS.

From Toronto Books and Notions.

SELL OFF YOUR OLD STOCK.—The principle of selling off old stock at reduced prices is now so universally acknowledged by our leading retailers, that some of our readers may think the advice out of place, and yet a visit to the majority of our fancy goods stores betrays the fact that seldom is the rule put into practice at all, and never in the regular and systematic manner which the change-We do not advise ableness of the trade demands. the cutting of prices upon staple goods, in which you are not over-stocked, simply because you do not happen to have had customers for them, but so soon as you have reason to believe that certain articles are likely to become unpopular or to depreciate in value, then lose no time in "marking them down "-not in driblets, but all at once and to such a figure as will insure a rapid sale. will give you the name of being cheap, and thereby help to sell the new goods bought with the proceeds of the dead stock. The new goods in turn will give you the reputation of being enterprising and will at the same time yield handsome profits. Remember, delay is fatal. The work must be done sooner or later. Why not do it at once and make it profitable?

DON'T neglect to dress your window—regularly and completely. A radical change in your street show, if attractive, is worth columns of advertising. This, like all other sound business principles, applies equally in small and large communities.

Buy the right article at reasonable figures rather than the wrong article at cheap figures. Fresh goods bring a better profit than job goods and sell more readily, and in "jobs" you invariably get "what you don't want," and that "is dear at any price."

NOTES ON CATALOGUES.

CATALOGUES OF SECOND-HAND BOOKS.—David G. Francis, Astor Place, N. Y.: Catalogue, no. 84, of ancient and modern books. (36 p., 8vo.)—Nash & Pierce, 80 Nassau St., N. Y.: Catalogue, no. 5, of miscellaneous books. (16 p., 8vo.)

THE "Harvard University Belletin" for May contains, in addition to the regular list of additions, another instalment of a catalogue of the Works on Dante, a continuation of the Calendar of the Sparks Manuscripts, and the first instalment of a List of Works on North American Fungi, with the exception of Schizomycetes, published before 1827, compiled by W. G. Farlow and Wm. Trelease.

THE "BIBLIOGRAPHIE DES BIBLIOGRAPHIES," published by M. Leon Vallée in 1884, met with so hearty a reception that the enthusiastic compiler has felt encouraged to bring out a supplement, which has recently been issued by Em. Terquem, of Paris. It claims to include all bibliographies published until the beginning of 1886. Owing to untiring research, and the quantity of titles furnished by French scholars and those of other countries, the author feels convinced that he has covered all important bibliographical publications which have appeared since the issue of "Bibliographie des Bibliographies." He has also included such as were unavoidably omitted in the first volume. The supplement numbers 354 pages, and is divided into two parts, the first being alphabetical, the second classified by subject. (354 p. O. pap., 15 fr.)

JOURNALISTIC NOTES.

CHARLES EGHERT CRADDOCK begins a new tale, "The Story of Keedon Bluffs," in June Wide Awake.

DR. DANIEL G. BRINTON retires from the editorship of the Medical and Surgical Reporter, d Philadelphia, but will not abandon medical journalism.

A DETAILED editorial criticism of Lord Wolseley's estimate of General Lee appears in the June Century. Seventeen separate points at made against the English critic.

THE Illustrated News Company, of this city, is printing, "from duplicate plates, by special arrangements with the proprietors," the Illustrated London News and other foreign pictorials.

THE first number of The Public Service Review has just been issued. It is a neatly printed quarto sheet of 16 pages, well edited, and full of interesting reading-matter to all belonging to the military, naval, or civil service.

A NUMBER of Boston writers have united in the establishment of a new literary weekly to be called The Twentieth Century. The first number will be published in the fall. The editorial corps includes Henry A. Clapp, who will have charge of the dramatic department; C. A. Ralph, the art department; Mrs. Maude Howe Elliot, society department; Miss Louise I. Guiney, Bliss Cameroe, and Bernard Berenson, literary department; W. P. Apelthorp, of the musical department.

GEORGE KENNAN, who has recently returned from his Siberian trip for The Century, made a visit to Count Tolstol, at the urgent request of Siberian state exiles, who wished the novelist and tractarian to know the horrors of their situation. The forthcoming Century will contain an account of this visit and the circumstances leading to it, told with considerable detail and showing the Count's striking character and peculiar beliefs, together with his mode of life. A frontispiece portrait of the novelist in his peasant-blouse will be given.

THE April numbers of the Edinburgh, and the Quarterly Reviews, in the original English edition, are just being sent out to American subscribers by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. American swill be interested in the Edinburgh's articles on Railway Problems, Conder's Syrian Stone-Lore. Gardiner's History of the Great Civil War (of England), and the Contest for the Union, now raging in Parliament. The Quarterly has as its leading article a discussion of the character of Shelley, and further treats of Competition in Wheat Growing, National Biography (aprefer of Leslie Stephen's great work), English History from Peel to Palmerston; and winds up with a fine Tory blast on The National League and the Law of the Land.

Scribner's Magazine for June contains an illustrated article on "Some Illustrations of Napoleon and his Times," by John C. Ropes. This is in a similar vein to his article on "The Likenesses of Julius Cæsar." The illustrations are from the author's valuable collection of Napoleon portraits. Mr. Ropes' commentary on the portraits is a study of the physiognomy of Napoleon as affected by the great historical events of which he was the central figure. The third instalment of the "Unpublished Letters of Thackeray," which appears in the same issue, contains a four-page letter in fac-simile, with a pen-and-ink sketch of Jules Janin by Thackeray. A number of other Thackeray drawings are reproduced from the rare collection privately printed for Sir Arthur Elton.

In sending out the bound volumes of the six numbers of The Century magazine comprising the issues from November, 1886, to April, 1887, inclusive the publishers state that the average edition of each of these six numbers has been 28,000 in excess of the edition of the same numbers of the year preceding. Six hundred tons of paper have been used on these magazines. During the coming volume, ending with October of this year, the concluding papers in the war series will be printed, bringing the war down to its close. After this some supplementary articles will appear on the hospital service, the telegraph corps, etc., etc. The main part of the war interest will be transferred to "Abraham Lincoln: a history," the chapters of which printed in the volume just closed serve as an introduction to the extremely important political period which will be described in early numbers. The summer numbers of The Century will contain illustrated articles appropriate to the season—on American wild flowers, birds, vacation journeys, college regattas, etc., to-gether with a number of illustrated short stories.

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

MR. JAMES R. OSGOOD will sail again for London on June 4.

The second volume of Appletons' "Cyclopædia of American Biography" will be ready in a few weeks, and the third is likely to appear in the autumn.

Among the writers who have been named as the possible author of "A Club of One" are Dr. Holmes, Horace E. Scudder, F. Marion Crawford, and the Rev. T. T. Munger.

JUDGE WILBUR F. BRYANT, Lincoln, Neb., has written and will shortly publish a book entitled "The Blood of Abel." This will be a justification of Louis Riel and an arraignment of President Cleveland.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & Co. will have ready about the 1st of June the fifth and sixth volumes of their admirable edition of the works of Robert Browning. The final volume will contain a full index to all the poems and a table of first lines.

CHARLES L. WEBSTER & Co., the publishers sent Mrs. Grant a check for $33,384.53 last week as additional profits on Gen. Grant's Memoirs. She has received thus far nearly $400,000, which is probably the largest amount of money ever earned by the writing of a single book.

S. C. HAYES, 1217 Filbert St., Philadelphia, is introducing a line of new steel pens called the Cornelius & Co.'s pens. They are in four grades or classes—xxx extra fine; No. 1 railroad; No. 2 business; and No. 3 lawyer. They are very flexible and easy to write with, and will no doubt win many friends.

THE "Harvard University Bulletin" announces that the corporation have authorized the publication, through Charles Scribner's Sons, of a memorial edition of the late Prof. E. A. Sophocles' "Greek Lexicon of the Roman and Byzantine Periods," under the oversight of Prof. Joseph Henry Thayer.

GEO. BRUMDER, Milwaukee, Wis., will publish next month an "Amerikanisches Hühnerbuch," a practical guide to poultry-raising, giving all the various species of American and foreign fowl, with numerous wood-cuts. This book is written by the well-known German-American agriculturist, Hans Buschbauer.

CUPPLES & HURD have in preparation a life of Commodore Matthew C. Perry, who was so instrumental in opening the ports of Japan to the world. It will give a complete history of this "typical naval officer" from the time when, as a midshipman, he served in the War of 1812, to the treaty with Japan. It will be illustrated.

GEN. J. WATTS DE PEYSTER'S careful, intelligent, and comprehensive survey of the great and critical battle of Gettysburg has just been issued in neat pamphlet form under the title of "Before, At, and After Gettysburg." The author in his forcible style gives a clear and perfectly comprehensible idea of the most decisive battle since Waterloo.

A. S. Barnes & Co. will publish early this summer "Analytical Mechanics" for the use of colleges and scientific schools, embracing the course as now taught at the School of Mines, Columbia College, prepared by Prof. W. G. Peck, author of a series of mathematics for schools and colleges, also elementary treatises on physics, astronomy, and mechanics. Peck's "Determinants," recently published, has been adopted at West Point.

THE Historical Society of Pennsylvania propose to issue a volume to commemorate the centennial anniversary of the adoption of the Federal Constitution. It will contain the debates in the Pennsylvania Convention that ratified the Constitution, a number of able essays that appeared at the time, and biographical sketches of the Pennsylvanians who were members of the State and of the Federal Conventions. This valuable work will be edited by Prof. John Bach McMaster.

JAMES H. EARLE, Boston, has just published "Miss Havergal's Story," describing the experience of Frances Ridley Havergal, as gleaned from her letters, diaries, and writings, by L. B. E. (Mrs. Earle); also, "Sunday Newspapers" and "Sunday Travel," by Mrs. James H. Earle, two interesting little booklets, discussing the subject of Sabbath desecration. Mr. Earle will publish early next month "The Little Mother," a fascinating story of a young English lady, born in India, who was one of the right-hand helpers of Mr. Stead, of the Pall Mall Gazette, in his famous crusade.

FOWLER & WELLS Co., who were located fifty years ago in Clinton Hall, then 131 Nassau St., have made another of their successive moves up town, going from 753, below Eighth St., to 775, above Ninth St. Here they continue the publication of periodicals and books, devoted to their well-known specialties, importing and carrying a full line of Isaac Pitman's phonographic literature for which they are the New York agents. They also have here commodious rooms for the exhibition of their very unique and attractive collection, which has been fifty years in accumulating, and is the only collection of the kind in the world.

Ticknor's Paper Series is a happy idea of the publishers, and will be very acceptable to all readers during the summer that is now so close upon us. It will include a number of the most famous and successful of the novels of the past five years—books like Guenn, the Story of a Country Town," "A Nameless Nobleman," and others of equal value and merit; and with these come brilliant new works, like De Montauban's "The Cruise of a Woman-Hater," and the vivid and fascinating Venetian novel, "The House of the Musician," by Virginia W. Townsend, whose "Neptune's Vase" won such great praise a few years ago. They are handsome and shapely volumes, substantially bound in decorated heavy paper covers. The series for 1887 will include thirteen volumes, appearing one each week during May, June, and July. The initial number of the series is the famous and widely-approved novel, "The Story of Margaret Kent." The wonderful success of this book is shown by the fact that within less than two years it has run through ten editions.

FUNK & WAGNALLS have just ready a "Supplement to the Schaff-Herzog Religious Encyclopædia," the first volume of which was issued in 1854. The volume is devoted to biographical sketches of living divines, celebrated preachers, Christian workers, theological professors, church dignitaries, and editors of prominent religious periodicals. The German Encyclopædia of Herzog excludes living writers, so that this supplement had to be specially compiled. In almost every case the authors have seen and corrected what has been written about them, and have in most cases supplied the information themselves. The editors have aimed at accuracy and conpleteness, as well as strict impartiality in the desire to make a reliable book of reference for readers of all theological schools. The three volumes of the original Encyclopædia have also been thoroughly revised and brought down to date, and are now ready in a new edition. "The Life of the Rev. Geo. C. Haddock," of Sions City, which we announced last year, is now completed. Mr. Haddock was murdered by the foreman of a leading brewery in Sioux City, because he was determined that the liquor laws of the city should be enforced. His son, Frank C. Haddock, has written the book, and it is hoped its sale will provide means of existence for his mother. This house also brings out a little vo-ume of "Hints on Early Education," which ap-peared sixty years ago in London, and was generally attributed to a sister of Elizabeth Fr. although published anonymously in eighteen successive editions.

CASSELL & Co. will publish next month the "Life of Luther," on which Dr. Peter Bayne has been so long engaged.

Mr. BESANT has written an account of his literary partnership with James Rice in a preface prepared for the forthcoming library edition of their novels.

THE third volume of Mr. T. F. Rowbotham's "History of Music" will be published at once by Trübner & Co. It is subdivided into two books. Book III. dealing with the decline of paganism and the dark ages, under which is comprised the growth of the Gregorian system to the time of Charlemagne; while Book IV. treats of the Middle Ages, the Arabs, and the troubadours.

GRIFFITH, FARRAN & Co. have brought out a new registered Prayer-Book case, fitted with an ingenious but simple contrivance by which, when opened, the book is brought above the level of the case, and thus can be got at without the use of the thumb-nail, a process necessary in the ordinarily made case, and often damaging to the book. The case is an upright folder of most dainty and elegant appearance, satin lined, with padded sides, spring clasps, handles and tassels. The case contains the Prayer-Book and Hymnal.

THE Boston correspondent of the Critic writes: "Speaking of 'shop talk' reminds me of a rank injustice done to English authors which came to my notice while I was in Jamaica. It is generally supposed that much as they suffer from the lack of international copyright in America, their interests are protected in the British colonies; but I found that few other editions of the popular English writers circulate in Jamaica than the cheap American reprints of Harpers, Munro, Lovell, and Ogilvie. These are stacked high on the counters of the Kingston booksellers, and the extent to which they are sold may be imagined from the fact that one firm could afford to insert an advertisement half a column long in all the local newspapers of a pirated American edition of 'She,' which they offered at a shilling a copy. On the other hand, American authors were represented by English reprints, David Douglas' pretty little editions of Holmes, Howells, Stockton, etc., ranging along the counters with Franklin Square copies of Payn, Hardy, Besant, and Mrs. Oliphant."

WORTHINGTON CO., 747 BWAY, N. Y.

From " Their Pilgrimage."

Copyright, 1886, by Harper & Brothers.

AFLOAT.

From " In Divers Tones," (Lothrop.)

Ah Love, on the mirror of waters All the world seems with us affoat-All the wide, bright world of the night; But the mad world of men is remote, And the prating of tongues is afar. We have fled from the crowd in our flight, And beyond the gray rim of the waters All the turmoil has sunk from our sight. Turn your head, Love, a little, and note Low down in the south a pale star.

The mists of the horizon-line drench it. The beams of the moon all but quench it. Yet it shines thro' this flood-tide of light. Love, under that star is the world Of the day, of our life, and our sorrow, Where defamers and envious are. Here, here is our peace, our delight-To our closest love-converse no bar.

OW that adventurous spring has broken the ice and fairly started on its grateful mission of clothing Mother Earth in all the beauty of verdure, and awakening into action her strength and vigor; and that summer is about to take up and carry forward the work so well begun-pent-up man himself begins to grow restive and to experience the contagion of budding life, and chafes to be out of his shell, that he may enjoy to the full the treat so bountifully spread by nature. Already the city folk are discussing the probabilities and possibilities of a flight to the seashore, to the mountains, or to some quiet, romantic nook in the country-anywhere, anywhere to escape the baked walls of their houses-while the country cousins are contemplating an exchange contrariness of human nature — anything for a change!

And then there are the stay-at-homes, content (whether they have the means or not for an excursion) simply with a week's release from the "grind" of the every-day struggle for existence. A spell in which they may give themselves up to do or to let alone whatever they choose. Perhaps to browse among the old book-shops, the city library, museum, or to ramble about the streets, taking pleasure in looking on while others are at work, hugging themselves the while with the ignoble satisfaction that they, for the moment at least. are better off than others.

Whatever the ambition or the condition of the multitude who now take, and are enabled to enjoy, a respite from work, the principal question with all is, how may we best enjoy ourselves? Not an easy question to answer off-hand, considering the diversity of tastes. There is, however, one suggestion which, it seems to us, can never be out of place. Estes Park, Colorado.

From Mrs. Amos Little's "The World as We Saw It." (Cupples & Hurd.) •

For eight or ten miles before we reached the park the road was excellent, though it was constantly ascending until, when within two miles of our destination, it descended eight or nine hundred feet into a beautiful valley. This valley is undulating, and about three miles wide and eight miles long, with several cañons leading into it, through one of which we had entered. There are many trees in it, and a stream called the Great Thompson winds through it. It is surrounded by high mountain-peaks. Long's Peak and the Snowy Range are partially covered with snow, and their white summits are beautifully tinted morning and evening. They seem to be about one mile distant, but are really eight or ten miles

The scenery of the last part of our ride was so magnificent that we forgot all the discomforts of the earlier part. Besides, we had had three relays of horses and an excellent driver, and we did not feel over-fatigued when we drove up to the Estes Park Hotel, about half-past seven in the evening.

The hotel is a two-story frame house, capable of accommodating thirty or forty persons. There are ranches three or four miles apart, each consisting of a main house where the meals are provided, and smaller houses of two or three rooms, which are taken by families who board at the main house.

The atmosphere at the high altitude of the park is so light that, when starting to walk at the usual speed, one is forced to stop and grow accustomed to the new action of heart and lungs. Woollen clothing snaps with electricity, and the hair grows rebellious from the same influence.

Early the next morning we saw coming over this beautiful natural park, on horseback, our friends, Mr. and Mrs. C., who were here seeking and finding health. They reported having seen some mountain-sheep near Ferguson's Ranch, where they were stopping. Another person told of a man having killed three bears and one deer the week before, about five miles from the hotel. This information, added to his enjoyment of the trout which had been caught in the stream near by, aroused the enthusiasm of A., who is an ardent sportsman.

For myself, I took more delight in the beautiful wild flowers; a bouquet gathered that morning contained fourteen varieties. During the day there came a shower, giving a magnificent view of the clouds sailing over the surrounding mountains.

Sunday in the park was like all other days, only the gentlemen did not go fishing. The head-waiter, Peter, who seemed to be the chief man of the hotel, said that last year on Sundays they had no lunch, but a service, while this year they had no service, but a lunch, and he thought the guests liked this way better.

We drove over in a one-horse phæton to call on our friends at Ferguson's Ranch, and were much amused at the primitive style in which they were living. A long, one-story, part log, part board house contained the dining and general sitting-room, the latter having a large fireplace, where an open fire is built every evening. In a line with that are built framed one-story houses, unpainted and unfinished inside, the framework and joists serving for shelves. But the novelty and the invigorating atmosphere give all a

We found Mr. C. making a seat out of a beerbarrel; his health is greatly improved, and the three children are perfect pictures of health. The youngest was a fine specimen of a Colorado baby, a handsome, black-eyed, curly-haired, white-and-pink-complexioned boy. A little girl of ten, a daughter of Dr. A., of Boston, who is also here for his health, sat astride of a horse, and rode a fearlessly as an Indian girl. Indeed, she did not look unlike one, with her red cape and dress, her striped stockings, and with her dark hair flying. She was racing up and down the park, waiting, she said, for her mother to join her.

In a few days one grows somewhat accustomed to the rarity of the atmosphere, though any unusual degree of exertion makes one puff and pant in the most unexpected manner. The park is seven thousand two hundred feet above the level of the sea, and the peaks around are seven thousand feet higher than the park. Magpies are chattering everywhere around; they reminded me of my childhood, when I was frequently told I chattered like a magpie. I realized for the first time the full meaning of the expression. They do chatter, chatter continually.

There is a good deal of game here, especially early in the season. A gentleman said that six weeks before we came he had seen fifty deer and twenty mountain-sheep just opposite the hotel. In July they go up into the mountains above the timber line.

These mountain-sheep are very large; their bodies are longer than those of deer, but their legs are not as long. They are about the same color, have hair instead of wool, are very much larger than ordinary sheep, and have enormous horns.

Trout are exceedingly plentiful. A. returned from one trip with seventy. Our days alternated between fishing and riding into the different cañons. One charming drive was to Lamb's Ranch. It was about seven miles through the park, over the mountains, in lovely cafons, around great boulders, and seemed nearly all the way like driving through a garden of flowers. Even between the track of the two horses at times there was an unbroken line of flowers, columbine, lobelia, larkspur, evening primroses, wild roses, and many other varieties. It seemed almost cruel when we were forced to turn out of the beaten road and drive over the sod to avoid a bad place, thus crushing such lovely flowers. I felt as Burns did when he ploughed up the daisy.

Godsville's Church and River.

From Mrs. Leith Adams' "Aunt Hepsy's Foundling." (Lippincott.)

As to Godsville Church, there was only one thing to say to that, namely, to allow without more ado, that it was a perfect gem. It was one of the few stone buildings in the village, which gave it an air of greater staidness and gravity than its surroundings, and rejoiced in a stained glass window with three lights. In summer, the pale green of the Virginian creeper's deep-lobed leaves clothed its walls; and in the fall-oh, who could describe aright the beauty of the church in its fall dress? The glowing crimson of some of the graceful, drooping wreaths that garlanded it on every side, the exquisite pale rose-tints of others.

The river—the lovely winding river—was one of Godsville's greatest natural beauties. you had lived near it a whole year through, you began to look back and wonder was it most beautiful in summer-when the giant trees overhanging it mingled their graceful branches in the rippling waters and the beds of tall river-grass bent to the soft rush of the stream; or in the fallwhen fading leaves richly dight in their deathrobes of crimson and gold floated on its surface, when its ripples grew to waves, and its impetuous rush drew the river grass almost level with its breast; in winter-when, like a white ribbon, here and there bluely transparent where the ice was glare, it seemed to wind its way among trees from fairy-land or out of the realms of the Winter King in some gorgeous Christmas pantomimetrees clothed to the tips of their slenderest branches with ice-jewels; when the sweet chimes of the sleigh-bells startled the cross-bill in his woodland haunts, and willing, sturdy steeds flevalong the beautiful river's ice-bound depths; or in spring-when the breath of the south wind began to loosen its fetters and the hummocks floating staidly on its surface let the deep blue water show its face to an awakening world; when the snow dript in gentle rain from the trees on its banks, and birds that had flown away for the winter came back to twitter in the branches and peer flutteringly about for the first signs of the tiny, swelling buds.

Petrice and Ogden.

From Melville Philips' "The Devil's Hat." (Ticknor.)

Then Petrice stood before me, drawing on her gloves, an operation in which I became profoundly interested, for it was one I had not witnessed for a long time. Her head was half buried beneath the great chip hat in which I had first seen her, but the abundance of silky, golden hair could not all be confined, and it straggled out on her white forehead and hung about the graeful neck. Her cheeks were aglow with health, even lightly freckled below the blue eyes, which sparkled as brilliantly as the brooch at her throat. Yet I confess to you that then and often afterwards my gaze lingered upon the red lips, hiding and revealing the shiny white teeth.

"Schlau and the Major are too engrossed in business to be gallant, Mr. Ogden," she said, handing me a large blue-and-white parasol. Nothing but mammon, mammon, mammon; until I am beginning to fear the contagion may catch me. Mamma is already a victim." Her mother's eyes filled at the playful words, and Petrice saw and clasped her impulsively to her breast.

And as I stood there a witness of the pretty tableau, those words of the Major came back to me— "Schlau's black cat and kitten." They were both dressed in half-mourning, and Mrs. Corliss had on a white lace head-dress, that rimmed her dark hair to great advantage. Pointing to this, Petrice said:

"How could you be worldly in that halo!"

"Petrice, darling, hush! Mr. Ogden, I am fearful that the freedom of her life here is making her too free of speech.'

I do not know that I am a trustworthy judge of human character, but I felt at this moment that I fairly understood the temper and worth of this girl. Perhaps by this time I have presented her truthfully enough for you to form your own opinion. But there was a redeeming something in her manner that quite removed her from all the young ladies of her type whom I, and doubtless, you, have met; a something that made her domineering cleverness seem naïve and charming, at least to me; and a something so subtle that I find I cannot put it into words. I was very happy that morning. At parting, Mrs. Corliss had said a few motherly words of admonition, and you cannot estimate how inspiriting it was for me to arrogate to myself, however groundlessly, a fraction of the concern she expressed for our safety and timely return. You see, it had been so long since any one had treated me so, that the simple act awakened memories "dear as remembered kisses after death "-of fugitive odors of lilac, honeysuckle, and new-mown hay; of sweet days in the woods, on carpets of yielding moss; of nights on the river—of a wonderful night on the sands, under the soft light of the full moon, when the shadowy boom of a vessel far out on the satinlike surface of the sea was just dipping into the silvery sheen—I could hear the roar of the surf; and then the sonorous tap of a woodpecker; the sounds of many birds and insects; a confusion of old familiar voices—until suddenly, with a start, I became alive to a question repeated petulantly by Petrice.

"Have you ever heard it, Mr. Ogden?"

I had been vaguely conscious that she was talking; but whether to Schlau and the Major, who were just ahead, or to me, I was too absorbed to know. However, rather than confess my inattention, I boldly hazarded the statement:

" Often! "

She laughed musically.

"There is no mistaking that sepulchral tone or far-away look. Now, I beg of you, don't develop any idiosyncrasy while we are together. But it is my customary luck—I believe I know more eccentric people than any one else in the world! Half my girl friends had marked peculiarities. At Lausanne there was one who used to ask me every day if I didn't think she looked like Madame Récamier, until I told her she was the very picture of Madame de Staël, and almost broke her heart."

"Why, what have I done?"

"You have permitted me to ask you in vain three questions, tell you one anecdote, and squander one excellent pun and numberless pleasantries upon you, without notice. Now let me ask one favor of you—if you can remain unpre-occupied of mind so long—please tell me candidly if you are like all the other people about here. I could find out for myself, I suppose, if I chose to wait; but I don't want to. This first symptom is a shock to me."

"Like what people, and in what respect?"

"Why, are you of the oil oily? Did you come here fired simply with the noble resolve to wildcat or die? Is petroleum your highest aspiration?"

"Are you at all serious?"

"Certainly, I am!"

"Then, in the same spirit, let me say that my coming here was purely accidental; that I am not in love with wildcating or any other speculative business; that I am by profession a lawyer, but that I do not love the law; that I greatly fear I am a trifler in the world; that I have no settled plans, or even views, save certain valueless ones in the impracticable world of sentiment; that, to tell the whole truth, I am somewhat ashamed of my connection with the Devil's Hat affair; and that my ultimate intention, it I have any at all, is presently to realize what talls to me

desire of travelling indefinitely abroad."

"Very good! Now, for your confidence, I will try you again. While you were so ungallantly communing with your own thoughts, I was thinking of the romantic aspect of petroleum; of these 'dry-holes' which mark, many of them, the graves of buried hopes; and I asked you if you had ever heard the story of well 'No. 5,' sunk over there on the side of that ravine."

"To which I replied?-"

"Often!"

"I unwittingly told a lie, and crave your pardon. But won't you heap coals of fire on my head?"

"I'm sorry now I mentioned it, for I can't tell the story as the Doctor does. He has a charm of voice and language all his own, and it gives the story nearly all its interest."

Below us the brook, because of the recent rain, rushed turgidly through the narrow valley, and swept in a long, muddy curve around the distant bend in the road, which Schlau aud the Major, evidently tired of the leisurely pace that we had adopted, were turning with lengthy strides. The sun here shining hotly upon us, Petrice drew closer to me under the shade of the parasol, and, lowering a little the front of the chip hat, began, in a soft, steady voice, the following story of well "No. 5."

Mr. Van Riper at War with Progress.

From H. C. Bunner's "Story of a New York House." (Scribner.)

Mr. Van Riper had more cause for his petulancy than he would have acknowledged even to himself. He was a man who had kept his shop open all through Clinton's occupancy, and who had no trouble with the English. when they were gone he had had to do enough to clear his skirts of any smirch of Toryism, and to implant in his own breast a settled feeling of militant Americanism. He did not like it that the order of things should change-and the order of things was changing. The town was growing out of all knowledge of itself. Here they had their, Orphan Asylum, and their Botanical Garden, and their Historical Society; and the Jews were having it all their own way; and now people were talking of free schools, and of laying out a map for the upper end of the town to grow on, in the "system" of straight streets and avenues. To the devil with systems and avenues! said he. That was all the doing of those cursed French-He knew how it would be when they brought their plaguy frigate here in the first fever year—'93—and the fools marched up from Peck's Slip after a red nightcap, and howled their cutthroat song all night long.

It began to hum itself in his head as he walked toward Water Street—Ça ira—ça ira—les aristocrates à la lanterne. À whiff of the wind that blew through Paris streets in the terrible times had come across the Atlantic and tickled his dull old Dutch nostrils.

But something worse than this vexed the conservative spirit of Abram Van Riper. He could forgive John Pintard—whose inspiration, I think, foreran the twentieth century—his fancy for free schools and historical societies, as he had forgiven him his sidewalk-building fifteen years before; he could proudly overlook the fact that the women were busying themselves with all manner of wild charities; he could be contented though he knew that the Hebrew Hart was president of that merchant's club at Baker's, of which he himself would fain have been a member. But there was something in the air that he could neither forgive nor overlook, nor be contented with.

There was a change coming over the town—a change which he could not clearly define, even in his own mind. There was a great keeping of carriages, he knew. A dozen men had bought carriages, or were likely to buy them at any time. The women were forming societies for the improvement of this and that. And he, who had moved up-town from Dock Street, was now in an old-fashioned quarter. All this he knew, but the something which made him uneasy was more sudtile.

Within the last few years he had observed as introduction of certain strange distinctions in the social code of the town. It had been vaguely intimated to him-perhaps by his wife, he could not remember—that there was a difference between his trade and Jacob Dolph's trade. He was a ship-chandler. Jacob Dolph sold timber. Their shops were side by side; Jacob Dolph's rafts lay in the river in front of Abram Van Riper's shop, and Abram Van Riper had gone on Jacob Dolph's note, only a few years ago. Yet, it seemed that it was genteel of Jacob Dolph to sell timber, and it was not genteel of Abram Van Riper-to be a ship-chandler. There was, then, a difference between Jacob Dolph and Abram Van Riper—a difference which, in forty years, Abram Van Riper had never conceived of. There were folks who held thus. For himself, he did not understand it. What difference there was between selling the wood to make a ship, and selling the stores to go inside of her, he could not understand.

The town was changing for the worse; he saw that. He did not wish-God forbid !- that his son John should go running about to pleasuregardens. But it would be no more than neighborly if these young bucks who went out every night should ask him to go with them. Were William Irving's boys and Harry Brevoort and those young Kembles too fine to be friends with his boy? Not that he'd go with them a-rollicking-no, not that-but 'twould be neighborly. It was all wrong, he thought; they were going whither they knew not, and wherefore they knew not; and with that he cursed their airs and their graces, and pounded down to the Tontine, to put his name at the head of the list of those who subscribed for a testimonial service of plate, to be presented to our esteemed fellow-citizen and valued associate, Jacob Dolph, on his retirement from active business.

The Lesson of the Leaf.

From Margaret J. Preston's "Colonial Sonnets."

Behold this blade of grass—its lightest sway

Owns Nature's touch—the worldling's name for God:
It does not hold itself erect, nor nod

Before the breeze, nor turn to meet the day, Nor catch the dew-drop dripping from the apray

Of yonder overarching golden-rod,

Nor drop a wilted stem upon the sod,

Save with one instinct only—to obey. But man, supreme of God's creation, dares Deny His Being's law, and overpass All his clear intuitions. Not to kim Dumb nature-worship of the blade of grass !

Cooperstown.

From Chas. Dudley Warner's "Their Pilgrimage." (Harper.)

The morning after this conversation, there was an excursion to Cooperstown. The early start of the tally-ho coach for this trip is one of the chief sensations of the quiet village. The bustle to collect the laggards, the importance of the conductors and drivers, the scramble up the ladders, the rush to get congenial seat-neighbors, the fine spirits of everybody evoked by the fresh morning air, and the elevation on top of the coaches, give the start an air of jolly adventure. Away they go, the big red and yellow arks, swinging over the hills and along the well-watered valleys, past the twin lakes to Otsego, over which hangs the romance of Cooper's tales, where a steamer waits. This is one of the most charming of the little lakes that dot the interior of New York; without bold shores or anything sensational in its scenery, it is a poetic element in a refined and lovely landscape. There are a few fishing lodges and summer cottages on its banks (one of them distinguished as "Sinners' Rest"), and a hotel or two, famous for dinners, but the traveller would be repaid if there were nothing except the lovely village of Cooperstown, embowered in maples at the foot. The town rises gently from the lake, and is very picturesque, with its church spires and trees and handsome mansions, and nothing could be prettier than the foreground, the gardens, the allees of willows, the long boat-wharves with hundreds of row-boats and sail-boats, and the exit of the Susquehannah River, which here whirls away under drooping foliage, and begins its long journey to The whole village has an air of leisure and refinement. For our tourists the place was pervaded by the spirit of the necromancer who has woven about it the spell of romance; but to the ordinary inhabitants the long residence of the novelist here was not half so important as that of the very distinguished citizen who had made a great fortune out of some patent, built here a fine house, and adorned his native town. It is not so very many years since Cooper died, and yet the boatmen and loungers about the lake had only the faintest impression of the man-there was a writer by that name, one of them said, and some of his family lived near the house of the great man already referred to. The magician who created Cooperstown sleeps in the old Englishlooking churchyard of the Episcopal church, in the midst of the graves of his relations, and there is a well-worn path to his headstone. Whatever the common people of the town may think, it is that grave that draws most pilgrims to the village. Where the hill-side cemetery now is, on the bank of the lake, was his farm, which he visited always once and sometimes twice a day. He commonly wrote only from ten to twelve in the morning, giving the rest of the time to his farm and the society of his family. During the period of his libel suits, when the newspapers represented him as morose and sullen in his retirement, he was on the contrary in the highest spirits and the most genial mood. "Deerslayer" was written while this contest was at its height. Driving one day from his farm with his daughter, he stopped and looked long over his favorite prospect on the lake, and said, "I must write one more story, dear, about our little lake." At that moment the Deerslayer was born. He was silent the rest of the way home, and went immediately to his library and began the story.

In the Palace of the Grimaldis at Monaco.

From " Miss Bayle's Romance." (Holt.)

When Mr. Wentworth proposed to visit the palace the ladies were delighted. They had never entered a palace and they entertained very exaggerated notions about the residences of royalersonages. However, after walking through the Palace of the Grimaldis, they expressed their disappointment. They had seen many hotels in America in which the rooms were as large and as sumptuously furnished; indeed, both Mrs. Bayle and her daughter expressed their own preference for the Palmer House in Chicago over the Prince's Palace in Monaco. Certainly the Palmer House is a much newer building and decorated in a more gorgeous, though not a more artistic style than the palace.

It was in vain that Mr. Wentworth called Mrs. Bayle's attention to the frescos in the courtyard and told her that they were the work of a great Italian artist. Mrs. Bayle saw nothing to admire, and she gave it as her opinion that these famous frescos were in want of a fresh coat of paint. When assured that the "Triumph of Bacchus," which was one of the subjects represented, was a work of high art, she made uncomplimentary remarks about the principal figures, and said that, if they were coated with white-wash, it would be all the better. The truth is that neither Mrs. Bayle nor her daughter were capable of appreciating a work of art. Besides, they had not been long enough in Europe to have acquired the hypocrisy of the tourists who praise or blame the artist, not because they really like or dislike his works, but because they have learned certain phrases in guide-books. As Mrs. Bayle took the light of nature for her guide, she often went astray, going into raptures over the pictures which no one would buy and being very anxious to acquire pictures which no one praised.

which both ladies admired without reserve. It The York room was the only one in the palace is a triumph of gorgeous ornamentation. painted ceiling is really an artistic production, but there is more ostentation than artistic merit in the gilded walls. The attendant who showed them over the palace spoke with bated breath when he said, "This is the York room." Mr. Wentworth knew that the Duke of York, brother of George the Third, had died there in 1767; but neither his countrywomen nor Lord Plowden Eton had any knowledge of this histor-When told of it they expressed interical fact. est, thinking perhaps that the room in which the brother of a king dies must have undergone a sort of consecration. They listened with polite attention while he told them the story as recorded by Horace Walpole. When he said that he had no more to narrate, his hearers were unfeignedly grateful that his: tale was at an end, and they almost wished himat the bottom of the blue water at the base of the rock when he added, "I ought not to have omitted to mention the ingenious tyrant Honore the Fifth, and the stupid tyrant Florestan the First whose foolish conduct was the main cause of the revolt of the greater portion of his subjects, which was followed by the secession of Rocca-bruna and Mentone." While this useful but unappreciated knowledge was flowing from the lips of Mr. Wentworth, the carriage was conveying the party back to Monte Carlo.

They got down in the square in front of the Casino. Each was ready to question the other, "What shall we do next?" Mr. Wentworth anticipated the question by saying that the afternoon concert would begin in the course of a few The party went to the concert-room, minutes. and heard the performance of an instrumental band which is one of the best in Europe, and, possibly, in America also. Between the pieces Lord Plowden was subjected to an examination by Miss Bayle. She was as much pleased as surprised to find that Mr. Wentworth had displayed far more intimate acquaintance with the persons and facts of modern English history than Lord She could not understand why he Plowden. should be both ignorant of his country's history and apparently indifferent about it.
"Well! Lord Plowden." she began, "were you taught history at school?"

"I believe I was," he cautiously replied, adding, "but I was taught so much that I cannot now remember anything.'

"But what have you read since leaving school?

What are your favorite books?

His favorite book was his betting book, but he was in doubt whether he should say so. He had read a few story-books in his younger days; he had a vivid recollection of "Robinson Crusoe" and "Gulliver's Travels;" he had skimmed the pages of a few sensational novels when he had nothing else to occupy him; but he was so much in doubt as to how to answer the question without exposing himself to ridicule that he said: "I have generally so much to do that I have had no time for a systematic course of reading since I left school." And, without pausing for a reply And, without pausing for a reply which it might be inconvenient to satisfy, he put this question in turn :

"Mr. Wentworth has assured me that all American ladies are great readers. Perhaps you will tell me whether that is true.

"Yes, sir, I guess that's so : some of us do read a mighty heap of books. Mother is an excep-She never opens a book, as she prefers the papers and the magazines. I don't care much for the papers and I never read anything in the magazines but the novels.'

Then what works do you prefer?"

"It is difficult to say, I like so many. Don't you think those of James Payn, William Black, and Blackmore are first-class?"

Lord Plowden was again in a difficulty, being one of the very few educated Englishmen to whom the names of these contemporaries conveyed no pleasant associations. He was not ready to make an avowal which, he feared, would lower him in Miss Bayle's eyes, so he said a few words to the effect that he was glad to hear that these writers were appreciated in America. remark did not have the expected effect, because Miss Bayle at once exclaimed, "Surely you ought to know that all these writers are far better understood and appreciated in America than in England. When William Black visited Chicago we made more fuss about him than if If James Payn he had been the President. and Blackmore would visit Chicago our citizens would let them know what it is to be popular. You English people do not seem to care | while the good Mrs. Warwick screnely presided half enough about your best men." Lord Plowden could not understand or reply to this tinde and he felt relieved when Miss Bayle went of a a tangent, as he thought, and said, "Are you food of yachting?"

He was glad to be able to answer emphatically in the affirmative, adding, "Why do you ask?"

"Because," she replied, "you should read kt. Black's yachting stories; they make one in low with the sea. If you have not read them you cannot tell me whether they give a picture of yaching in your country. In these stories everybody's able to cat, drink, and sing in all weathers, while in America some people always get sick on a yacht when the weather is bad." Lord Plowdes was about to tell her that he often had sea-sick companions, when the concert ended and the party moved away.

Juanita.

From Mrs. Mary Mann's "Juanita." (Lothrop)

"Again, planters are very circumspect about bestowing freedom upon their slaves, because freedom given to one makes others discontented. The race from which Juanita had sprung had been haughty and overbearing, for they knew they were emancipados, and a strong hand had always been required to keep them in subjection. The mother and grandmother of Juanita had demanded their freedom as a right, a demand which had been sternly resisted, for its admission might have necesitated its application to many other individuals entitled to it on the same ground, all unwitting as they might be of the fact.

Neither the Marchioness nor Helen knew the secret fire that burned in Juanita's heart. She had carefully guarded the knowledge her mother had imparted. As she grew older and shared in Ludovico's knowledge, and knew what freedom meant, she had lost her vivacity and fallen into a deep melancholy. The Marchioness acounted for it easily on the common principles of human nature, and had often felt that to her ignorance would indeed have been bliss. She now allowed her to occupy herself very much as she pleased. Her tastes were decidedly artistic, and she soon surpassed Ludovico in both execution and conception. She could not only imitate flowers with her brush, but with her needle, and the exquisite decorations of curtains, towelling, table-linen, etc., that made the palace of the Marquis celebrated, were the work and inspiration of her hands, to say nothing of the walls that constantly brought strangers there. It is a national custom to paint the walls both inside and outside of houses, and it is generally the work of the tutors who are hired to teach the children, and these are often cultivated men, but their position in the family is little above that of an upper servant. Juanita's decorations were not so exceptional therefore, except in quality, but that made them sufficiently famous to attract much attention.

While busied in the creation of beauty around her, the smouldering fires of Juanita's inward being were restrained from bursting into flame. Every day the family board was arranged like a work of art. Every flowering vine and tree appeared in its season upon the tables. All was performed in the spirit of a service of love. When not with her mistress, her home was the nursery, where she assisted Mrs. Warwick in the care of the younger children, whose taste she formed unconsciously by the exercise of her own, over all, the Marchioness herself included—for Mrs. Warwick was one of those substantial New England matrons who command every one's respect, and are mothers and nurses by nature, as well as by craft, to all around them.

On the Eve of His Wedding-Day.

From Sidney Luska's "The Yoke of the Thorah." (Cassell.)

As he had done upon a former and slightly similar occasion, and as he was wont to do whenever his spirits were in any degree perturbed, Elias climbed up-stairs to his studio, and sat down at the window. All day long the sun had shone bright and hot; but ever since dusk the sky had been clouding over; and now, plainly, a thunderstorm was near at hand. The atmosphere was With increasing frequency thick, still, tepid. shafts of jagged lightning tore their way through the clouds, and were followed by long, sullen, distant rumblings, as of suppressed fury somewhere. Suddenly a breeze sprang up, swelling quickly into a strong wind. The air filled with The branches of the trees, over in the dust. park, groaned aloud; and from here and there came the noise of banging shutters, and of loose things generally being knocked about. The flames in the street-lamps below flared violently. Some of them went out. Big drops of lukewarm water began to fall, splashing audibly where they struck. All at once, a blinding flash, a deafening peal of thunder, from right overhead; and the rain came pouring down in torrents.

Now, of course, Elias Bacharach—he in whose soul the man had long since worsted the Jew, and reason abolished superstition-of course, Elias knew that what his uncle had said about the God of Israel interposing to prevent his marriage, was the sheerest sort of rubbish. That the old gentleman had spoken in good faith-that he really believed in the validity of his own prophecies, and had not uttered them merely with a view to working upon his hearer's imagination, and exciting his fears-Elias could not doubt; for to resort to such strategy was not, he conceived, in the character of the artless and simple-minded rabbi. But that very good faith only proved him to be the victim of the most preposterous delusion. For himself, Elias had no misgivings. dent as a mortal can be of any future event, in this world of uncertainties, so confident was he that the morrow evening would make of him and Christine man and wife. Of course, there was always the unforeseen to be allowed for: accidents were always possible. But if he had none but supermundane obstacles to dread, then he might regard his marriage as already an accomplished fact. And, notwithstanding, Elias felt very much disturbed—very much annoyed, mystified, and ill-at-ease. All that the rabbi had said was stuff and nonsense, at absolute, obvious variance with science, with simple common-sensefit material for laughter, for a certain contemptuous pity; but, nevertheless, every time that Elias recalled just what the rabbi had said, and the rabbi's manner of saying it, he felt a sharp, inward pang, very like terror; he had to catch a quick, short breath; and he confessed to himself that he would give a good deal to be enabled to get inside the rabbi's consciousness, and learn the grounds on which he based his extraordinary, but apparently secure, conviction, and find out exactly what form of divine interference he antici-Despite his clear perception of the rabbi's sophistry, he caught himself furtively querying: "Can there be anything in it?" Despitehis assurance that all would go well, he caught. himself furtively wishing that all was well over, and his marriage-certificate signed and sealed. "There is not a single chance of its taking place—not any more chance of its taking place than there is of the sun's failing to rise to-morrowmorning." That phrase stuck like a thorn in his. mind, and produced a considerable irritation.

This state of things, besides being intrinsically unpleasant, was offensive to Elias's self-esteem. That he, at his age, in his stage of enlightenment, should be unsettled by the senseless menaces of a superstitious old bigot! Like a child frightened by its nurse's bugaboo. And yet, there it was again, the sharp, internal twinge, so like the sting of terror; and there again he fell to speculating upon what the causes of the old man's singular belief could be.

He sat at his window, peered out into the night, and tried to think of something else. He tried to think of Christine, tried to call up her image, tried to live over again the evening that he had passed with her, tried to picture to himself the happiness that the coming day held in store. No use, "There is no more chance of its taking place than there is of the sun's failing to rise to-morrow morning." The rabbi's voice kept ringing in his ears, like a hateful tune that one has heard, and can't get rid of.

The Romans.

From F. Marion Crawford's "Saracinesca." (Macmillan.)

Dr. Johnson would have liked the Romans, for in general they are good lovers and good haters, whatever faults they may have. The patriarchal system, which was all but universal twenty years ago, and is only now beginning to vield to more modern institutions of life, tends to foster the passions of love and hate. Where father and mother sit at the head and foot of the table, their sons with their wives and their children each in his or her place, often to the number of twenty souls-all living under one roof, one name, and one bond of family unity-there is likely to be a great similarity of feeling upon all questions of family pride, especially among people who discuss everything with vehemence, from European politics to the family cook. They may bicker and squabble among themselvesand they frequently do-but in their outward relations with the world they act as one individual, and the enemy of one is the enemy of all, for the pride of race and name is very great. There is a family in Rome who, since the memory of man, have not failed to dine together twice every week, and there are now more than thirty persons who take their places at the patriarchal board. No excuse can be pleaded for absence, and no one would think of violating the rule. Whether such a mode of life is good or not is a matter of opinion; it is, at all events, a fact, and one not generally understood or even known by persons who make studies of Italian character. Free and constant discussion of all manner of topics should certainly tend to widen the intelligence; but, on the other hand, where the dialecticians are all of one race, and name, and blood, the practice may often merely lead to an undue development of prejudice. In Rome, particu-larly, where so many families take a distinct character from the influence of a foreign mother, the opinions of a house are associated with its mere name. Casa Borghese thinks so and so.

Casa Colonna has diametrically opposite views, while Casa Altieri may differ wholly from both; and in connection with most subjects the mere names Borghese, Altieri, Colonna are associated in the minds of Romans of all classes with distinct sets of principles and ideas, with distinct types of character, and with distinctly different outward and visible signs of race. Some of these conditions exist among the nobility of other countries, but not, I believe, to the same extent. In Germany the aristocratic body takes a certain uniform hue, so to speak, from the army, in which it plays so important a part, and the patriarchal system is broken up by the long absences from the ancestral home of the soldier-sons. France the main divisions of republicans, monarchists, and imperialists have absorbed and unified the ideas and principles of large bodies of families into bodies politic. In England the practice of allowing younger sons to shift for themselves, and the division of the whole aristocracy into two main political parties, destroy the patriarchal spirit; while it must also be remembered that at a period when in Italy the hand of every house was against its neighbor, and the struggles of Guelph and Ghibelline were but an excuse for the prosecution of private feuds, England was engaged in great wars which enlisted wast bodies of men under a common standard for a common principle. Whether the principle involved chanced to be that of English domination in France, or whether men flocked to the standards of the White Rose of York or the Red Rose of Lancaster, was of little importance; the result was the same—the tendency of powerful families to maintain internecine traditional feuds was stamped out, or rather was absorbed in the maintenance of the perpetual feud between the great principles of Tory and Whig-of the party for the absolute monarch, and the party for the freedom of the people.

Be the causes what they may, the Roman nobility has many characteristics peculiar to it and It is cosmopolitan by to no other aristocracy. its foreign marriages, renewed in every generation; it is patriarchal and feudal by its own unbroken traditions of family life; and it is only essentially Roman by its speech and social customs. It has undergone great vicissitudes during twenty years, but most of these features remain in spite of new and larger parties, new and bitter political hatreds, new ideas of domestic life, and new fashions in dress and cookery.

Picking Cranberries at Cape Cod.

From "A Week Away from Time." (Roberts.)

The harvest of the cranberry is an important epoch to the dwellers on the south side of Cape Cod. It may be called the industry of that region, as the salting and packing of coulish is d other parts. Every autumn, before the hard from come, the "raccolte "of the berry takes place. The school-children are given a vacation of three or four days, and young and old devote themselves to the gathering of the fruit without which no Thanksgiving or Christmas dinner in New England is complete.

This special bog, on this special day, presented a memorable sight. A piece of cleared land of ten or twelve acres, of no great value for other purposes, had been consecrated to cranberry culture, and this year's yield was reported to be a remarkably fine one. The delicate vine. with its myrtle-green leaves, ran thick and close, close to the sandy soil; underneath, when you stooped to look, you saw the rich crimson berries, with a purple bloom on them. Indeed, when one looked over the whole wide acres, the ruddy fruit cast a warm tinge up through the green, as one sees the blood-red heart of the alexandrite glowing through the deep green of the stone.

This cranberry bog was set in a frame of bright foliage; shrub oaks, their leaves, "some stained as with blood, and made crimson, and some as with tears;" maples, scarlet and gold in the sunshine; red woodbine running riot over the trunks of old pines; all sorts of bright bushes and vines joining hands to dress the festival with the gayest they could give; and kneeling on the ground were women and children by scores, silently picking and filling the measures as if performing some sacred rite. Here and there a bright shawl on one of the women, or a gay handkerchief round a girl's neck, or a colored ribbon knotted in her braids, made a spot of sympathetic color among the crowd. One little fellow looked up as the party approached, and caught sight of Joujou in Mrs. Bowdoin's arms. "Oh, look, mother, look!" he cried; "that's the littlest dog I ever saw! Just see his tail!" The woman lever saw! Just see his tail!" never raised her head. "PICK!" she shouted in stern, stentorian tones from the depths of her sunbonnet to the small boy, who hung his head What were little and obeyed the mandate. dogs or their tails, when weighed in the balance with his stint of so many quarts an hour! Each picker is provided with a tin measure, into which he drops the berries as he pulls them from the vines. He is paid so much for each measure. These are poured into larger receptacles, and finally into bushel-baskets. Inspectors walk about, and take account of what each one does, and shout the tally across the fields to the head man, who marks it all down. The bushel-basketman, who marks it all down. fuls are poured into sacks, which are piled upon barrows and carried off to fill the carts awaiting them by the roadside. Muriel saw one of these barrows being carried slowly along by two men. one at each end; they seemed to be singing as they walked, and their song came over the field in a sort of solemn chant.

"See!" said Muriel; "the funeral of the cranberry! Could anything be more picturesque? "And they are as unconscious of making pictures," said Ralph, who stood by her side, "as any of Millet's French peasants."

Sea-Birds of Norway.

From "Norway Nights and Russian Days." (Fords, H. & H.)

The sea-birds of Norway are so interesting that I would gladly speak of their character and habits at length, were it not that the monopolists in the "Diffusion of Useful Knowledge" have carried off the entire harvest in this field, without leaving a grain for the modest gleaner. But, even at the risk of telling an oft-told tale, I must repeat what I heard orally about the eider-ducks. These particularly pleasing birds are very numerous in certain localities, and swim fearlessly in the very track of the steamers, When a duck and her mate have flaunted about sufficiently in their honeymoon, and have decided to rear a family and have a "settled home," they waddle to the shore and choose with much fastidiousness, but little perspicuity, an eligible site—generally on the ground in a retreat far from the madding crowd, but occasionally in the cleft of a rock, and they have been known to take possession of a kitchen-oven. The nest is made of seamoss, profusely padded with tender gray down from the duck's breast. This accomplished and the eggs laid, the pire de famille wanders back to his piscatorial and other amusements in very human style, while the poor mother finds her nest suddenly stripped of both eggs and down by the monster, man. She then makes her way through the waters to her lord, who has been considerate enough to leave his address, and they wade back to shore for a second experiment. But as the duck has already sacrificed her down, the drake now contributes his own, which, however, is white and less fine and valuable. nests are despoiled a second time; but if the robbery is again repeated, the discouraged birds depart permanently from that part of the coast. Strangers are not allowed to visit the birdislands, and Norwegians are careful to give the third brood every chance to hatch; when the ducklings are large enough to make their first plunge into the sea, they are protected as far as possible from the falcons and other foes which hover above. The islands are sources of large profit, and become heirlooms in families, of sometimes one or two hundred years' descent.

The Little Shepherdess. From Thoroddsen's "Sigrid," (Crowell.)

After some further altercation between the two, the final upshot was that Orm should accompany his father out to the croft, where a couple of knolls would be assigned him to try his hand on; and little Sigrid had for the first time to follow the herd through the narrow, winding sheeppaths, lunch-basket in hand, though with much reluctance. She was then scarcely nine years of age, and unusually small at that. Her mother whispered to her before she left home, "You shall be whipped, child, if you get home too soon at night, or lose any of the sheep."

Gudrun, the servant-girl, was despatched with her to point out where the herd should graze. "There is nothing to weep for, child," said Gudrun. "You need not be afraid of the elves in the valley; they will do you no harm." This consolation had no other effect upon Sigrid than to recall to her memory all the tales she had heard about the Elf-Hill and the Valley of Spirits. After a short time the flock reached its destination, and began at once to spread about over hill and dale, enjoying the vigorous grass.

"Now see here, Sigrid," said Gudrun; "here is where you, must keep the sheep. But be careful that they don't skip up into the mountains; alongside the slopes you may let them go without danger, but you must not keep them in a flock, for then they don't give so much milk. When the evening shades fall on the bottom of the valley, it is time to call them together, and then look out that none are left in the smaller vales. Take care of Bilda, for she is in the habit of stealing away to hide herself; she has done so twice with me, so I had to search for her far up in the mountain, the wretch! Don't be too ready to set Lubbe after them, for he sometimes snaps at them. So now good-by to you."

"Oh, please don't leave me yet, dear Gudrun!" cried the little one, with tears in her eyes; "I'll die of grief and weariness."

"Ain't you ashamed to whine in this manner?" said Gudrun, turning away, running as fast as her feet would carry her; and she was in a moment out of sight.

But little Sigrid's breast so heaved with grief that it seemed to her as if it must burst; the tears trickled down her cheeks; she turned giddy, and her limbs refused to support her; she sank down on the spot, buried her face in her hands, At last she grew so tired of and wept aloud. crying that she fell asleep, and dreamed that a man clad in white came to her, and passed his hand softly over her eyes, and said, "Jesus Christ will comfort all good children who weep." At this she awoke, and passing her hand over her cheeks found that they were not moist, but burned, and were a little sore; her bosom was easier, and her heart was not so full of grief; but still the tears glistened in her small blue eyes. The fear and dread that had come over her before she fell asleep were now nearly gone, and had no power to dishearten her, remembering what she had dreamt. She seated herself in the shelter of a declivity, and commenced to say her prayers, repeating one after the other; and this, too, tended to appease her more and more. Suddenly she fancied that she heard barking of dogs on the other side of the valley; she arose, went up on the hill, close by the declivity, and looked about. All was calm and tranquil beneath her; the sun hung low, and the evening shades had commenced to advance down over the mountain slopes, nearly reaching the bottom of the valley, of which Gudrun had advised her. Sigrid then knew she must have been asleep a good while, and now she remembered the instruction Gudrun had given her to drive the sheep home when the shades reached the recess. At the same moment her eye fell upon a spot beyond the stream, which stretched itself towards where she stood; the centre was elevated, and a big stone rested upon it; and from this she fancied that she distinguished a boy dressed in black to come out, and who disappeared so quickly into the valley, that she could hardly follow his movements. Now Sigrid felt badly off indeed; her heart beat with terror, and she thought of nothing else than escaping as quickly as possible; but all at once she heard some one calling the sheep together at the other side of the valley, and this so loud, that it re-echoed throughout the mountain slopes on both sides. Sigrid's dog, Lubbe, had during the day remained about the foot or the slope, close up to Sigrid; but now, hearing the call reverberate from rock to rock, he sprang up, shook himself, pricked up his ears, and then suddenly ran off, and in less than a minute was out of Sigrid's sight. The sheep leaped down from the grass-plots on the slopes, and gathered together in a flock. Sigrid hurried to count them and while thus occupied the shades had entered the valley; then she commenced driving the herd home, arriving at the farm just at milking-time; no sheep were missing, and they found little Sigrid's work to their satisfaction.

A Mean Man.

From Joseph Kirkland's "Zury." (Houghton, M. & Co.)

The only individual of the four travellers who will journey on with us all through our story is Zury, the boy. His parents, by some means we wot not of, found for him the name "Usury, pronounced with the accent on the second syllable, which extraordinary prenomen, shortened to "Zury," has played a great part in Spring County life from that day to this, and will bear a proportionally important burden in these chronicles.

Zury had come early—so early that he had forgotten it-to that most thrilling experience in every fine boy's life, the discovery that he, too, is valuable to the little world about him. He was a natural worker, a seeker after chances to be useful, his ambition always outrunning the When he could be lifted demands made on him. on a horse to go for the cows, of course he rebelled against "tending baby;" and when he could plough, he despised milking and the other "chores," but he did them all the same, asking no rest save the rest of change of occupation. Achievement sprang from his mind and muscles like petroleum from a flowing well; the only thing needful was to provide channels for it.

Frontier life was what he needed to grow in. Openings for hard profitable work are there plenty, unmistakable, and tempting. One of the ways in which he showed his enjoyment of the consciousness of power was a natural impatience of control or interference, a brusque self-assertion, a rudeness which in a weaker being would Some splendid horses have been intolerable. will balk if you check or guide them, though at their own speed and in their own fashion they will cheerfully do more than anybody could ask or expect.

So sets out a traveller magnificently equipped with natural gifts. Let us see how circumstances favor, or dwarf, or distort their growth.

Up to this time he still retained a few boyish weaknesses—not love of play, exactly, except as all work was play to him, but a love for ingenious devices in the work he did, and a busy brain always occupied with thoughts of such devices and of other things. Of course he was an industrious and accomplished whittler; his jack-knife was always at hand and always sharp, and in the intervals of more important avocations always busy. His colts grew up "ready broke," or near it; they began to help him almost as soon as they were weaned. His horses were as tame as dogs, and (up to their limited intellects) as intelligent. As he would say, "Hoss-flesh is cheaper 'n man-flesh. Whenever ye can do back-work with hoss-paower, ye're a makin' money.

Another of his weaknesses was his love for his helpless sister. It was a yearning fondness in direct proportion to his strength and her weak-ness. If he had grown weaker or she stronger, his affection would have become less absorbing. Of course little whittled playthings were her constant companions on the bed-cover—the earth-floor was too damp for her-and mixed with them were lots of vari-colored birds eggs. exquisitely cleaned by a process devised by Zury.

The first eggs he brought her were of a delicate cale green, and formed her dear delight for days. Her little hands, more delicate than the eggs themselves, fondled them with a tenderness that kept them safe from breaking, but unhappily nothing could save them from natural decay.

"What's th' matter, Shoog? Don't 'ee cry."

"Nem' mind, Sweety; bub'll git ye s'more t'morry!"

"No, I want them."

"All right. Shoog sh'll have 'em ag'in t'morry!"

"Sure enough?"

" Jest's sure's shootin'."

So the little sufferer went to sleep comforted. Zury took the eggs and tried to "blow" them -making a hole in each end, and -puffing the contents through with his breath. But they were too delicate, and either the shell broke in spite of all care or the holes were so big that the beauty was lost. He pondered over the problem long and hard, gazing at the egg he held, and trying to overcome the apparent physical impossibility. "Couldn't I poke in suthin'? Not hardly; th' ain't no room. Lessee naow. Ef I warn't so big, I'd jis' crawl inside 'n' scoop her aout god! Lessee—lessee—lessee. Thar! I've got it!"

He made a pin-hole in one end of each egg; and with the first streak of dawn he was up and out hunting for an ant-hill he had before observed, where some almost infinitesimal marvels of industry in formic shape were always busy at their incomprehensible tasks. Here he deposited the eggs, and soon saw the little creatures doing his desired work in a manner delightful to behold.

"Where's my eggies?" asked a sweet little voice when he came in for his breakfast,

"Brer Zury's a-fixin' on 'em. Wait till noonspell, then we'll see!"

"Sure enough?

" Jest's sure's shootin'."

Midsummer Words.

From Mrs. Whitney's "Daffodils." (Houghton, M. & Ce.)

What can they want of a midsummer vers In the flush of the midsummer splendor?
For the Empress of Ind shall I pull out my purse, And offer a penny to lend her?
Who wants a song when the birds are a-wing,
Or a fancy of words when the least little thing
Hath message so wondrous and tender?

The trees are all plumed with their leafage superb. And the rose and the lily are budding;
And wild, happy life, without hindrance or curb,
Through the woodland is creeping and scudding.
The clover is purple; the air is like mead,
With odor escaped from the opulent weed, And over the pasture-sides flooding.

Every note is a tune, every breath is a boon;
'Tis poem enough to be living.
Why fumble for phrase while magnificent June Her matchless recital is giving?
Why not to the music and picturing come,
And just with the manifest marvel sit dumb,
In silenced delight of receiving.

Ah, listen! Because the great Word of the Lord,
That was born in the world to begin it,
Makes answering word in ourselves to accord,
And was put there on purpose to win it.
And the fulness would amother us only for this—
We can cry to each other, "How lovely it is !
And how blessed it is to be in it!"

"Three years ago Thomas Nelson Page . published Marse Chan, a story of Virginia before and during the war . a truthful, dramatic, pathetic, and at the same time delightfully humorous representation. Consequently, Mr. Page enjoys the reputation of having written the most exquisite story of the war that has yet appeared. . These stories have been felicitously characterized as 'variant treatments of the same motif,' for which we feel no disposition to quarrel with Mr. Page, characterized as 'variant treatments of the same mosty, for which we feel no disposition to quarrel with Mr. Page, being eager to hear the tale as often as he may find ways to tell it, and grateful to him for such beautiful and faithful pictures of a society now become a portion and parcel of the irrevocable past."—Harper's Magazine.

unerring instinct of literary refinement, which yet does not lack in strength, and is fully masculine. The story must not be judged as a novel; it is not a figure-piece, but rather a landscape into which figures are slightly sketched. As such, however, it is one of the artistic successes of the year."—The New York World.

A SPLENDID BOOK FOR SUMMER TRADE.

Around the World on a Bicycle.

From San Francisco to Teheran. By Thomas Stevens. With a preface by Thomas WENTWORTH HIGGINSON. With a Colored Frontispiece—Portrait of the Author in Costume—by Kelly, and over One Hundred other Illustrations.

The great interest which has developed in the last few years in the exhilarating sport of wheeling makes fresh and timely this record of Mr. Stevens' extraordinary journey. In every way his achievement was a remarkable one; and he has told the story of it in a style that will delight all who admire pluck, skill, and endurance, brought out under novel conditions and amid picturesque scenes in remote lands.

"Mr. Thomas Stevens need have little doubt that the most splendid piece of personal adventure of this century will be placed to his credit. For the originality of its idea, the physical endurance and pluck necessary for its execution, the dangers involved in it, and its own inherent interest this boundation county the most of the property of the person of the property of the person of the pe terest, this bicycle trip round the world will pretty certainly remain unequalled in our time."—Pall Mall Gazette

"The mere moral courage demanded of the man who essays an expedition into regions where such an outlandish carriage has never before been seen is sufficiently noisn carriage has never before been seen is sunctently autable to entitle Mr. Stevens to the credit which he will no doubt obtain for his plucky exploit. No man who honors courage, pluck, endurance—no man who is capable of understanding these qualities—will feel anything but admiration for him."—The London Standard.

NEW BOOKS.

Miss Parloa's Kitchen Companion.

An entirely new work of a thousand pages by the authority on household matters. z vol., crown 8vo, cloth, $2.50.

This book merits the highest praise. It has not been hastily written to meet a sudden popular demand, but is rather the result of conscientious labor in leisure hours for several years, and it will unquestionably be a welcome visitor in thousands of families all over the land in which Miss Parloa's name and fame alike are familiar. The book describes minutely an ideal kitchen, tells what furniture, utensils, and stores should be provided for it, explains clearly the uses, and states the value of various kinds of food, contains bills-of-fare for all sorts of occasions, shows how tempting meals may be quickly cooked when unexpected guests come, gives explicit instructions about diet for the sick, and includes also as choice a collection of receipts in all departments of cookery as can be found in any ever published. It is thoroughly practical; it is perfectly reliable; it is markellously comprehensive; it is copiously illustrated; it is, in short, overflowing with good qualities, and is just the book that all housekeepers need to guide them in their daily duties, and to enable them to make their homes happy.

No labor has been spared by the author, and no expense by the publishers, to make the "Кітснен Сомраніон"

SOPHIE MAY'S NEW DEPARTURE.

DRONES' HONEY. A Novel. By Sorhie May. Cloth, $1.50.

"Heretofore the works of Sophie May have been written especially to please the young, and her 'Little Prudy Stories,' 'Dotty Dimple Series,' 'Flyaway Series,' and 'Flaxie Frizzle Stories,' for little folks, and her 'Quinnebasset Series,' for girls, have embalmed her name in the hearts and memories of thousands of admirers, who have been charmed by her wonderfully attractive stories. With 'Drones' Honey 'this gifted writer appeals to new and more experienced readers, and it is believed confidently that this latest product of her genius in the sphere of romance will add literary fame to that already gained by the popularity of her juvenile books. As a story of society it is well conceived in its plot and skilfully developed, indicating clearly that Sophe May is the possociety it is well conceived in its plot and skilfully developed, indicating clearly that Sophie May is the possessor of a vigorous and charming intellectual power. The motto, from 'The Republic of Plato,' 'When a young man has tasted Drones' Honey then he returns into the country of the lotos-eaters,' may give a sort of mystical cue to the general character of the volume."—Boston Transcript.

REV. J. FREEMAN CLARKE'S GREAT WORK.

LIFE AND TIMES OF JESUS, as Related by Thomas Didymus. New edition. Cloth, $1.50.

Thomas Didymus. New edition. Cloth, $1.50.

To those who are attracted by romantic narratives. D. Clarke's book will prove as vivid and thrilling as a note with its plots and counterplots. Taking Thomas the Doubter as hero, and Miriam the Jewess as heroine, he has constructed from their experience of the life and times of Jesus a work of remarkable power. Its pictures of manners and customs are graphic, its characters have life and motion, and its story is dramatic and realist. It is entirely safe to say that no such pen-picture of Jesus and his times has ever been written, every partiveting the attention of the reader by the captivating style of the narrative and the winning and inviting language, investing the intensely interesting subject with new light, and lifting the great work to a place in the realm of Christian biography, history, and oriental manner beside "Ben-Hur."

NOTES IN SEASON.

A. C. McClurg & Co. have just ready an American edition of John Reeves' work on "The Rothschilds—the financial rulers of nations."

D. LOTHROP Co. will issue shortly that popular ballad, "Curfew must not ring to-night," and many others of Mrs. Rose Hartwick Thorpe's, including "Remember the Alamo," that stirring story of the struggle for Texan liberty, in a handsome volume.

LEE & SHEPARD will issue at once a volume entitled "Life Notes; or, Fifty Years' Outlook," by Rev. William Hague, D.D., widely known throughout this country, but especially identified complete with Boston—where he was the pastor, at different times, of five leading churches—Providence, R. I., New York State, and Washington, D. C., series.

as an eloquent and scholarly Baptist clergyman, and orator. Dr. Hague's work will be filled with rare reminiscences, embracing an important period in our country's religious and philanthropic history.

CASSELL & COMPANY have nearly ready "The Housekeeper's Handy Book." This is a "handy book," as it implies, and it has been alphabetically arranged so that it is really its own index. There are few things that a housekeeper or a mother wants to know, about which she will not get some practical hints in this little volume. Not only are there receipts for making the most needed dishes at the least cost, but there are receipts for taking care of and renovating clothing, carpets, for papering walls, raising plants, etc. There are questions of etiquette answered, and a list of the precious stones of every month in the year, useful to persons when selecting birthday presents, the language of flowers, a list of Christian names with their meanings, and hundreds of other bits of useful information.

Benjamin & Bell make their début as publishers by issuing a literary curiosity, a satire, entitled "The Poets and Poetry of America." It is a neat pamphlet, and contains matter that was first published in 1847 in Philadelphia by Wm. S. Young, who did business at 173 Race Street. The editor, who conceals his identity under the name of Geoffrey Quarles, has written an ingenious introductory argument to prove that the author who originally signed himself "Levante" was Edgar Allan Poe. They announce for immediate publication a volume of "Society Verse by American Writers," selected by Ernest De Lancey Pierson, which will include about eighty poems, some by such well-known authors as Bunner, Aldrich, Helen Gray Cone, and others, and some by contributors who will appear for the first time in this volume. The book will be daintily printed by the De Vinne Press. Another interesting announcement they make is a novel by Edgar Saltus, to be entitled, "Mr. Incoul's Misadvent-The author has made quite an enviable reputation by his studies of pessimism—"The Anatomy of Negation" and "The Philosophy of Disenchantment"-as well as by his study of "Balzac," etc. His forthcoming work is said to be written in a pessimistic vein and to be exceedingly clever. A new volume by Appleton Morgan is to be issued by this firm under the title of "Shakespeare in Fact and Fiction." And, finally, they announce that they have secured the American market for the fourth edition of "The Book-Lover's Enchiridion," by Alex. Ireland.

NOTES ON AUTHORS.

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON has been sojourning in Switzerland for his health. We are sorry to learn that he is threatened with consumption, and is in a very delicate condition. He has always been careless as to his physical welfare, and it is said his present trouble was brought on by a steerage voyage to this country undertaken for literary purposes.

ADMIRERS of Mrs. Henry Wood, says the London Truth, will hear with pleasure that, in addition to "Lady Grace," the novel that is now coming out in the Argosy, she has left behind her another complete story, that will appear next year in the same magazine; also two long" Johnny Ludlow tales, and several short stories of this inimits series.

Balzao, Honoré de. The alkahest; or, the house of Claës. Bost., Roberts Bros., 1887. c.

tr. 2+307 p. D. hf. mor., $1.50.

Balthazar Claës, belonging to a wealthy Flemish family, has a deep interest in chemistry, and gets farther and farther in speculation. He at last believes it possible to discover the primal substance, the true elementary matter out of which nature constructs everything. This search for the absolute becomes the master-passion of his search fold the absolute becomes the master-passion of milife, and wife, home, children, and substance are all sacrificed to it. The story is a painful tragedy, worked out with more power even than Balzac habitually shows.

Marguerite Claës, the daughter, is a noble creation. Her strength of character and sense of justice stem the tide of her father's rash acts for a time, and restore the home to a semblance of its former happiness.

Barrett, Frank. The great Hesper: a novel. N. Y., Appleton, 1887. 3-173 p. S. pap., 25 c. A great uncut diamond found at Cape Town gives title to the book. It is owned in partnership by three mes, the daughter of one, familiarly known as "the kid," having also some interest in it. It is brought to England, and whilst waiting to be cut is stolen; this is but the beginning of a long series of most exciting adventures, in which the readers' curiosity is cleverly kept on the alert as to who the real thief is. The author brings out a fresh idea in his hero, whom he makes a "nyctalops," that is one who is blind in the daytime, but gifted with extraordinary vision at night. The great possibilities here for the apparently supernatural may be imagined. Barrett, Frank. The great Hesper: a novel. imagined.

Bastin, Edson S. Elements of botany; including organography, vegetable histology, vegetable physiology, and vegetable taxonomy, and a glossary of the botanical terms. Chic., G. P. Engelhard & Co., 1887. c. 13+282 p. il. O. cl., $2.50.

Many years' experience in teaching the subject have convinced the writer that there exists a genuine need for some work on botany better adapted to the wants of our high schools, academies, and colleges of pharmacy and medicine than any in present use. It is this conviction which has brought forth this work, which is simple and easy in arrangement, gradually leading the student up to scientific facts through his observation of ordinary plants and flowers and his common-sense. A too liberal use of technical terms and language has been avoided, and an endeavor made to teach as much as possible by illustrations.

por. D. pap., 25 c.

Benjamin, Fannie Nichols. The sunny side of shadow: reveries of a convalescent. Ticknor & Co., 1887. c. 188 p. S. cl., $1.

Twelve attractive little papers written in the lingering hours of a long convalescence. They aim to deal with life in a cheerful, hopeful way. They make excellent reading. The subjects are: The doctor: Patsy Pringle; Mrs. Runabout; The Harpies; Loving; Friendship; Suggestions of the sea; Thanksgiving: The materialist; Presentments; Christmas musing; From night to light.

Besant, Walter. To call her mine: a novel. N. Y., Harper, [1887.] 42 p. il. Q. (Harper's Franklin sq. lib., no. 583.) pap., 20 c. The novel opens with a confession which David Leighan makes on a small island in the Pacific Ocean. The shadow of his crime haunts him and finally drives him back to England, where he finds fate has interfered and prevented him from committing murder; his only feeling then becomes a desire to revenge himself, and his means of doing so take up most of the story, although Mary's love affair and her lover's trouble to gain their uncle's consent gives name to the book.

Birrell, Augustine. Obiter dicta: second series. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1887. 5+291 p. S. cl., $1.

The subjects of these eleven papers are: Milton Pope; Johnson; Burke; The muse of history; Charles Lamb; Emerson; The office of literature; Worn-out types; Cambridge and the poets; Book-buying.

cl., $4.50; shp., $5. This important work is divided into three parts: The receiving and keeping of deposits; the paying of them; and collections. The author's aim is to present in language which can be easily and fully understood the law of banking contained in the reported decisions of the American and English courts; he has added many illustrations, drawn from cases that were before the courts, for the purpose of rendering the principles plain, if he should have happened to state them obscurely in the text, and also of showing some of the conditions under which they

322 p. S. (No name [third] ser.) cl., $1. Life in Florida after the war is the leading motive. "Cracker Joe" is the wealthiest man in his immediate neighborhood; born poor and ignorant, but with much native shrewdness and intelligence, he quickly develops business qualities, which rapidly make him a rich man. His wife is also a character, while the negro cook, "Aunt Pruny." is a most decided element both for good and bad in the story. A New York family, impoverished by speculation, who buy a house from "Cracker Joe" and settle down to a permanent residence, add a charming heroine to the women characters. The "cracker" and "negro" dialects are thoroughly well done.

Meredith, G: The shaving of Shagpat: an Arabian entertainment; [also,] Farina. New ed. Bost., Robert Bros., 1887. 6+412 p. D. cl., $2.

The shaving of Shagpat" is said to be the author's first work of fiction. Shappat is a rich clothier in Persia, who has never been shaved. The wit, humor, and originality of Meredith and his wonderful command of language are shown to great advantage in this "Arabian entertainment." The other story, "Farina," is located on the Rhine in mediazval times, and the author is just as successful in producing the local coloring of Germany. The plot of both stories is too intricate to be detailed in a short sorie. short notice.

There is but little plot, but the conversations about men, women, and things are spirited and often witty. The descriptive portions of the book give good pictures of the ocean voyage, and of China, Africa, and San Francisco.

A long story with a mystery which centres in an old Russian refugee who lives in a cave or cavern in the Blue Ridge Mountains. The daughter of an American, a Miss Hastings, falls down a treep declivity whilst gathering ferns, and is found by the Russian and taken to his hiding-place. The reader is thus introduced to its inmates, and all its interesting surroundings. The Hastings and the Russian and his family find their lives connected from henceforth, many strange and thrilling events issuing. Nihilism and theosophy are in turn the subject of discussion and the motive of the story.

THE BOOKSELLERS' AND STATIONERS' PROVIDENT ASSOCIATION.

THE eighth annual meeting of the Booksellers' and Stationers' Provident Association was held on the evening of June 1, at the rooms of Geo. A. Leavitt & Co. Notwithstanding the rainy weather, nearly fifty members were on hand. At about half past eight the President, Mr. Dillingham, called the meeting to order. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved. Then the Secretary read his report as follows:

Mr. President and Members of the Booksellers' and Stationers' Provident Association of the U.S.:

It is with great pleasure that the Board of Trustees present to you their annual report, and give an account of their trust. Success has crowned their efforts during the past year, and our Association seems on a firmer basis than ever before. We have nearly reached the limit of membership, and the age of our members is below the average. The history of the Association in detail, for the past year, as far as figures can tell the story, is as follows:

Our net gain in membership for the year 1885 and 1886 was only four. This year our net gain is seventy. It is estimated that fourteen deaths a year to the thousand is the average loss of most insurance companies. Our rate for twelve months has been only seven; a fact which speaks well for our examining physician. It does not seem as if the great majority of the members of this Association appreciated fully the good it is doing, or how greatly it benefits the families of our deceased associates. Often the Treasurer of the Association is called upon to advance the money necessary to defray the funeral expenses of deceased Once at least during the past year members. has the Association been obliged, not only to guarantee the undertaker against loss, but also the friends who furnished the bare necessaries of life to the wife and children of the departed. The last benefit paid was $898, representing nearly a year's salary to the great majority of our members, and this was obtained at an outlay of less than $20. Can any one question the value of our Association to the clerks of the book and station ery trade? You will notice our membership has grown to 920, and our limit is 1000. If you have at he any friends whose real interest you have at he will you not be doing them a lasting favor recommending them to join this Association and pushing them until they do? Think of the low cost of membership! of the great returns! The old adage:

> "There is no friend so true As a dollar or two," holds good to-day, and will hold good for years to come. Returns for labor grow smaller each year, and it is harder every month to lay by the necessary provision for a rainy day. The rich have no need of our Association, but the clerk, depending on his weekly salary, the day laborer in our mills and manufactories; in fact, all connected with our trade, dependent on their own exertions for success in life, will find a membership in this Association one of the best of investments even when in health, for it anticipates being called upon for contributions, while, it death should come before a competency is secured, the knowledge that our members stand between his beloved ones and actual want, allows him to pass to the Better Land as he would lie down to pleasant dreams. Shall we not then, each and every one of us, urge all our trade friends to join the Booksellers' and Stationers' Provident Association? Sooner or later Death comes to all. Shall we let our friends meet him with empty pockets? The answer rests with you.

The report was approved. The President in commending this report urged on the members the necessity of making a personal effort to attain the maximum of 1000. This is especially important, as it seems to be the feeling of the Association, as it stands, that no changes are desirable until that point is reached.

The meeting then proceeded to elect five Trustees to serve for three years in place of Messrs-Lennon, Ryan, Morris, Cunningham, and Mc_ Carthy. There were cast thirty-six votes giving a majority to the old Board, which therefore remains in office.

Resolutions were then passed complimenting the President, Mr. C. T. Dillingham, for his zeal and disinterested work in carrying forward the interests of the Association; praising the Secretary for the efficient and able manner in which he has looked after the affairs of the Association, and for the masterly and handsome style in which the minutes of its meetings are noted; and the usual resolutions thanking Messrs. Leavitt & Co. and Cassell & Co. for the use of their offices, and the trade journals for courtesies extended.

Mr. Webster, of Clark & Maynard, then offered the following:

The law committee and two-thirds of the members of the Association concurring, each member having been notified and given ample opportunity to vote by postal card, that the Constitution of the Booksellers' and Stationers' Provident Association be changed as follows:

ART. III. (of Dues), Sec. 2, shall be changed to read:

"Upon the death of a member every other the motion to entertain the resolution when it member shall pay into the treasury the sum of one dollar and ten cents ($1.10); but there shall be at least eight assessments of $1.10 each in every year, whether there be eight deaths during that year or a less number. The excess of money received from the eight assessments above that required to pay the death losses of that year shall be passed to the Contingent Fund. Should there be more than eight deaths in one year, the Board of Trustees may omit any or all assessments after the sixth, if, in their judgment, the amount in the Contingent Fund warrants such omission."

ART. V. (of Death Payments). The first sentence of Art. IV., Sec. 1, shall be changed to read: "Upon the death of a member there shall be due to such person or persons as shall have been properly designated by the deceased member a sum cqual to one dollar multiplied by the number of members who paid the last previous assessment; but there shall be paid to such designated person or persons the sum of one thousand dollars, provided always that there is money enough in the Contingent Fund at the time of said death, which, together with the last previous assessment, will

"Initiation fees, fines from the delinquent officers, the extra ten cents paid at initiation and with each assessment, and all moneys collected by reason of assessments other than death assessments, shall form the Contingent Fund of the Association, from which its expenses shall be paid, and from which payments shall be made in accordence with Article IV., Sec. 1.

After a brief discussion, in which the feeling pervaded that it was not desirable to make any changes at present, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Laws.

Ex-Secretary W. D. Myers then called the attention of the meeting to the fact that what was needed to increase and strengthen the membership of the Association, and to enlarge its usefulness, was to deepen the interest of the trade in its work. In his opinion one step towards this would be to form a Booksellers' and Stationers' Club, which might establish a headquarters where the members and friends of the Association might meet socially, discuss its interests, and in many ways carry forward the work which he thought was now passive for the want of such an agency. To start such a project he asked leave to introduce the following:

Resolved, That a committee of fifteen, composed of the Board of Trustees of the Booksellers' and Stationers' Provident Association, shall devise ways and means to establish a Booksellers' and Stationers' Club in New York, with power to solicit subscriptions therefor; the said club to be under the management of the Board, and its rooms to be occupied by the Association.

After considerable talk, passing of the resolution, reconsidering the motion, and amending it, the motion to entertain the resolution when it was finally put to vote was lost. We are under the impression that had the subject been put before the Association in practical form—that is, had the advantages to the members been made clear, and statistics as to the practicability of the idea been produced—the resolution would have fared better.

A CURIOUS LITERARY COMBINATION. THE DETECTIVE AND THE NOVELIST.

Such a combination of authors as Messrs. Cassell & Company have just succeeded in making will prove an epoch in the literary world. They have got together a man with his brain teeming with stories of intrigue and adventure in which he has played an active part, and a famous novelist. The man of adventure lays his stories and his diaries before the man of letters, and we are given a book, which, for thrilling incident and literary style, has seldom, if ever, been equalled. This unique combination consists of Inspector Thomas Byrnes, Chief of the Detective Bureau of New York, and Julian Hawthorne, one of the most popular novelists of the day. Dumas, Dickens, or Charles Reade would have given worlds for such material as Inspector Byrnes has furnished Mr. Hawthorne. There will be a series of books rom the pens of these two gentlemen, the first, alled "A Tragic Mystery," being nearly ready or publication. It is the story of one of the amous crimes committed in New York, only the external features of which have hitherto been tnown to the public. It describes a mysterious nurder which startled New York several years go, narrates the efforts made by the police to iscover the criminal, the circumstances by which or a long time they were baffled and misled, and he final dramatic and tragic conclusion. tyle is said to be rapid and direct, and point after oint is made with telling power.

The Shaybacks in Camp.

Ten Summers Under Canvas. By SAMUEL J. BARROWS and ISABEL C. BARROWS. With map of Lake Memphremagog. I vol., 16mo, $1.00.

CONTENTS.—Gypsying in Maine: A Gypsy Clam-Bake: A Raid on Canada: Memphremagog; A Family Camp; Getting Settled; Camp Occupations; The Camp Kitchen, by Isabel C. Barrows; The Piquancies and Perils of a Steam Yacht; Nymphic Navigation; Spoon and Sinker: The Science of It; Spoon and Sinker: The Poetry of It; To Brome Lake; Massawippi, by Isabel C. Barrows; Our Log-Cabin; Mr. Shayback at Muster; Camp Life in India, by Isabel C. Barrows.

In the Preface to this engaging summer book Mr. Barrows says:

The custom of taking a summer rest is becoming a fixed habit in American business and professional life. What to do with this annual period is often a puzzle. Many people spend half their vacation in finding out how to enjoy the other half. For the last ten years the Shaybacks have found a practical solution to this question in camping out. The success of this form of recreation depends largely in knowing how to do it. The writers offer no formal treatise on this subject, but the following transcripts from their own experience will illustrate its various methods and possibilities. One definite aim of this book has been to show that this is by no means a distinctly masculine recreation, but that the ideal camp is the family camp.

The book will be found equally useful and entertaining, and ought to make the summer vacation much pleasanter and more salutary to thousands.

NOTES IN SEASON.

ROBERTS Bros. have in preparation "A Lad's ove," a new novel by Arlo Bates. They will sue in paper covers for summer reading "To ome on a Bicycle—Two Pilgrims' Progress," J. and E. R. Pennell, fully illustrated; "A ear in Eden," by H. W. Preston; and "The ew History of Sandford and Merton," by F. C. urnand, fully illustrated.

LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & Co. have in press d will shortly issue a new book by Mr. S. B. lexander, entitled "Ten of Us." The volume nsists of ten stories and sketches supposed to ve been written by a party of young people to attempt to find something original to write out, and who leave it to the public to judge if eir efforts have been successful. Several of the pries are said to be very odd and interesting.

A. C. Armstrong & Son will publish an American edition of "The Story of the Life of Queen Victoria, told for boys and girls all over the world," by W. W. Tulloch, son of the late Principal Tulloch, private chaplain to the queen. Besides the acquaintance with the private life of the palace, the volume receives added interest from the fact that it has been revised by the queen's own hand.

D. APPLETON & Co. publish this week in bookform, under the title of "The College and the Church," the "How I Was Educated" papers and the denominational "Confessions" from The Forum magazine; an enlarged edition of Bain's "English Composition and Rhetoric," and an auxiliary volume thereto, entitled "On Teaching English, with detailed examples, and an inquiry into the definition of poetry;" "Tempest Driven," a romance, by Richard Dowling; and new and cheaper editions of "Arius the Libyan" and "In the Golden Days."

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS publish to-day the second volume of Dr. James McCosh's work on Psychology, entitled "The Motive Powers." The first volume, "The Cognitive Power," treats of the operation of the senses; this volume brings the argument to a conclusion with an exhaustive discussion of the motive powers of the mind, including the conscience, the emotion, and the will. They have also just ready a new edition of Peile's "Lawn-Tennis as a Game of Skill," and Marion Harland's novel, "Judith: a chronicle of old Virginia."

THE J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY have just issued a batch of novels dealing more or less with American life, entitled "Wallingford," by an anonymous writer; "Behind the Blue Ridge: a homely narrative," by Frances Courtenay Baylor, author of "On Both Sides;" "A Summer in Oldport Harbor," by W. H. Metcalf; and "Mistaken Paths," by Herbert G. Dick. They have also just ready in their series of Practical Lessons in Nursing, "Outlines for the Management of Diet, or the regulation of food to the requirements of health and the treatment of disease," by Prof. Edward Tunis Bruen.

BELFORD, CLARKE & Co. have in press for immediate publication a new novel, "The Confessions of a Society Man," said to be written by a prominent society woman of New York, well known as a contributor to periodicals, which promises to be one of the literary sensations of the summer season. Like Thackeray's "Barry Lyndon" it is an elaborate study of selfishness, the hero unveiling with unconscious egotism, and in a most startling manner, the hidden life of the New York and Philadelphia Society man. Aside from its purpose and its lesson, for it has both, the novel is so fresh and clever in style, so unflagging in interest, so pretty and dainty in its mechanical parts, that it is certainly booked for a large sale. Its six full page illustrations, striking cover design, and graceful initial letters, are the work of a well-known artist.

THE story goes that a man stepped into a New York book-store the other day and inquired for Dr. Abercrombie's works, "The Intellectual Faculties," and "The Philosophy of Moral Feelings." The bookseller, after looking about, solemnly replied: "I know I haven't any 'Moral Feelings,' and I doubt whether I have any 'Mental Faculties."

The scene is laid in an English university town. Hugo Kennet, a stolid young professor fresh from a course of studies in Germany, accepts a chair at St. Bernard's and the hospitality of Prof. Gage's family; just as Hugo becomes interested in Petronella Gage, he has a strange encounter with her brother; this is followed by the latter's disappearance, and Hugo's inability to account for the event leads to an estrangement, which ends with his return to Germany, where the mystery of the story is unravelled.

Stevens, T: Around the world on a bicycle. V. 1. From San Francisco to Teheran. N. Y., C: Scribner's Sons, 1887. c. 14+574 p. il. O. cl., $4.

This handsome volume is dedicated to Col. Albert A. Pope, of Boston, who "by unstituted financial patronage" made the tour around the world on a bicycle by Mr. Thomas Stevens possible. The narrative is full of dash and adventure, and descriptions of nature as seen from a bicycle. Starting from San Francisco, climbing over the Sierras, and spinning across the great plains, he finally reached New York, from whence he embarked for Europe. In Europe he went through Germany, Austria and Hungary, Slavonia, Servia, Bulgaria, thence into Asia through Turkey. Here he finds his way through the Angora goat country, across the Kizil Irmak River to Yuzgat, and by many other interesting steps to Teheran. The book is a very elegant one, fully illustrated, and with a portrait in lithography of the handsome author.

It is what the author calls "a logically-necessitated supplement" to the five former volumes of the "Renaissance in Italy, "namely, "The age of the despots," "The revival of learning," treatment is analogous to that used in the early volumes, Mr. Symonds found it "needful to enter more.

minutely into details regarding facts and institutions connected with the main theme of national culture." The Catholic revival was by its nature reactionary. "In order to explain its influences, I have," he says, "been compelled to analyze the position of Spain in the Italian peninsula, the conduct of the Tridentine Council, the specific organization of the Holy Office and the Company of Jesus, and the state of society upon which those forces of Jesus, and the state of society upon which those forces were brought to bear." A list of books covering two pages indicates the most important sources consulted and referred to.

The flying-machine is described as made chiefly of paper, and propelled by electricity. It starts from Fairmount Park, Phila., carrying some learned citizens, much against their will, around the world. It defies the common theory in that it is heavier than the air it displaces, the inventor declaring that, to be stronger than air and so to dominate it, such superiority of weight is essential.

The leading argument is based on the theory that, as all mankind must live on the fruits of the earth, it is but right and just that all taxes should be collected from the right and just that all taxes should be collected from the land in proportion to the area or productive capacity of that portion held by each individual; that the tax on the first few acres, or enough for every family to have its house and garden, should be very light, enough to distinguish the landowner from the tenant and to serve as a poll tax and qualification to vote, without regard to the sex of the owner. sex of the owner. As the acreage is increased the rate of taxation is to be increased, so that it shall not be for the interest of any one to hold more land than can be profitably cultivated.

AN ANNUAL CATALOGUE FOR 1884-85.

We have had a number of communications as to the filling out of our catalogue system, of which one of the most interesting is printed in another column, calling for an annual catalogue for the year 1884 and 1885. This has seemed to us a matter of comparatively small importance, as the information called for is given in the "Trade List Annuals" for 1885 and '86, but we should be quite willing to complete an annual system of catalogues back to 1884, when the last volume of the American Catalogue was completed if there should prove to be a real demand for it in the trade. We desire, indeed, to honor every demand of the trade which we can meet, but that demand must necessarily be shown in the only terms in which it can be effective, that is, in terms of money.

We should be pleased to make the catalogue or catalogues called for by Mr. Mac either in two annual lists for the year 1884 and the year 1885, or as an eighteen-month list from the completion of the American Catalogue to the beginning of the Annual Catalogue just issued, and to include in the latter not only the omissions which we have so far discovered in the American Catalogue, but a number of distinctive features which we think would be of trade benefit. The cost of this work, for which the index would have to be entirely re-set, would be so considerable, however, that we should scarcely feel justified in undertaking it unless there were fair assurance of something like 500 subscribers at $5 for the volume or two volumes. Such a demand seems to us so improbable that we do not consider that we are likely to be called upon to fulfil this promise, but we shall be very glad to consider any suggestions from the trade as well as to register any

NOM DE PLUME OR PSEUDONYM. BOSTON, May 30, 1887.

To the Editor of the Publishers' Weekly.

DEAR SIR: Will you not call attention to the fact that nom de plume is not French, but an English barbarism, and rather worse than our restaurant French? Bookmen had better drop it, together with some other outlandish things they persist in using. C. W. ERNST.

A WORD TO CARELESS CORRESPONDENTS.

Crown Buildings, 188 Flret St., London, E. C., May 23, 1887.

To the Editor of the Publishers' Weekly.

SIR: Having large correspondence with the United States, chiefly with publishers and booksellers, we shall be glad to be allowed to mention the fact that for at least twenty per cent. of the letters we receive weekly we are surcharged from threepence upwards (according to weight), simply because our correspondents put on only the home stamp instead of the foreign one. This is doubtless due to carelessness on the part of those who stamp the letters; but it is a growing evil, and one which occurs more or less from nearly every correspondent, the result being a heavy and quite unnecessary weekly tax upon ourselves. Doubtless the same thing occurs with other recipients of American letters on this side. You will be doing a kindness to our mutual friends by asking their kind attention to this small matter.

Yours faithfully,

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & Co.

A CATALOGUE FOR 1884 AND 1885.

NEW YORK, May 19, 1887.

To the Editor of the Publishers' Weekly.

Now that the American Catalogue for 1886 is an accomplished fact, let us know what can be be done for 1885 and 1884. A plain statement of where the records of these two years are and their condition will show the need of some new What is wanted, I think, is one alphabet something like the 2d part of the American Catalogue of 1886 (or the monthly indexes). As that was about 75 pages, the two years 1884-1885 would be considerably less than say 200 pages. The design should be, I think, to include in it all books dated 1884 or 1885, so as to have but one place to go to for those years. This would of course take some titles from each of the following places: Publishers' Weekly Record, Sept., 1883-April, 1886; Trade List Annual, 1884-1886 inclusive; American Catalogue, 1876-1884; Annual Catalogue, 1886.

Perhaps it would do to rely entirely upon the data in the first mentioned between the dates indicated.

No record for any year will ever be probably quite complete. The only thing that can be done is to make each as good as it can be, and any titles subsequently found should go into the next weekly, monthly, annual, and decennial records following its discovery.

Excuse the digression. Having made a careful estimate of the cost of a catalogue for 1884-1885 as indicated above, divide by 100 and by 300. In any case let the edition be limited to the number that can be very promptly taken up and give those investing opportunity to realize on the investment, which they cannot do it there is a s investment, which they cannot do it there is a s ply beyond enough to satisfy original subsection

"JOSIAH ALLEN'S WIFE'S" GRIEVANCE.

New York, May 27, 1887.

I REGRET very much the necessity that compels me to draw the attention of the public to a fact which my friends think ought to be known.

There is a book largely noticed by the press as having been written by me, called "Miss Jones' Quilting," and having upon the title-page the imprint of Mr. Ogilvie as publisher and my name as author.

The facts of the case are as follows: Of the 206 pages making up that book less than twelve The little sketch pages were written by me. commencing the volume, the name of which has been given to the book, I wrote years ago and sold to a Philadelphia magazine. Mr. Ogilvie says that he purchased from some person in Philadelphia the right to reprint this sketch.

As to the other stories making up over 194 of the 206 pages of the book, I not only did not write them myself, but have no idea who did write them. I never saw nor heard of them until I saw it asserted in the press notices of the book that they were written by me.

So I think the public will agree with me that it is only a matter of justice to have the truth MARIETTA HOLLEY,

" Josiah Allen's Wife."

57 Rose St., New York, June 8, 1887. To the Editor of the Publishers' Weekly.

In reference to the above criticism of "Miss Jones' Quilting," written by "Josiah Allen's Wife," we desire to say that we purchased the copyright and Ms. of the story from a reliable party, who was the owner of it, and claim to have a perfect right to publish it in our own method, so long as we give Miss Holley the credit of having written the story. Yours respectfully,

J. S. OGILVIE & Co.

The above letters speak for themselves. have no doubt that the publishers in this case have acted unthinkingly, and without any intention to injure the author of "Miss Jones' Quilting." However, it will no doubt strike them as fair that Miss Holley has a right also in this matter, in that she should not be made responsible for work that is not her own-however good, or much better than her own, it may be.—ED. P. W.]

THE HENRY BILL PUB. CO. vs. ROBERT CLARKE & CO.

THE case of the Henry Bill Publishing Co. vs. Robert Clarke & Co., of Cincinnati, in which the plaintiff prayed for an injunction and account against the defendants for the sale of Blaine's "Twenty Years in Congress," was dismissed in the U. S. Circuit Court, Southern District of Ohio, Saturday, June 4, Justice Stanley Matthews delivering the opinion of the Court, Circuit Judge Howell E. Jackson and District Judge George R. Sage concurring.

It will be remembered that this was a case where Robert Clarke & Co. were charged with selling a subscription-book through collusion and conspiracy with the plaintiff's agents amount, although they knew the same had been paid to Leach by Nims & Co. Ont his point there was no conflict in the testimony.

The testimony showed that Robert Clarke & Co. had bought the books from H. B. Nims & Co., of Troy, N. Y.; who had paid one Leach, an agent for the Bill Co., for the copies they had then sent Clarke & Co. Leach in turn sent this money to the Bill Co. and they kept the the next following Easter lair.

Justice Matthews, after the argument by plaintiff's attorney and without hearing from the counsel for defendant, dismissed the bill, holding that there was a ratification of the sale by Leach to Nims by the Bill Co. through their retaining the money so paid, after knowledge of the manner in which Nims procured the books. this being equivalent to a sale direct to Nims by the Bill Co. The sale by Leach may have been in violation of his contract with the Bill Co., yet if they received the proceeds and held on to them, they cannot hold on and yet claim Nims & Co. have no title to the books sold.

CURIOUS FACTS CONCERNING THE EARLY BOOK-TRADE.

CARL B. Lorch, in an interesting review of Friedrich Kapp's "Geschichte des deutschen Buchhandels" (the first volume of which has just been issued by the Börsenverein) in the Börsenblatt, gives the following curious facts relating to the book-trade, past and present:

"In early book catalogues prices were not given; books, being looked upon as articles of commerce, and treated as any other wares, were sold in different places at varying prices. Aldus Manutius was the first printer or publisher who printed a priced catalogue, having found it impossible to satisfy all demands as to prices. Some time afterwards other publishers began to follow his example.

"The German Easter Fair Catalogue appeared during two hundred years without prices, and it was not until the eighteenth century that selling prices were stated. Until then books could be bought cheaper at the place of publication than A distinction was made between at the fair. prices for single copies and for a quantity. publishers allowed booksellers a special discount (from 10 to 40 per cent.), others none at all. first public offer of discount (20 per cent.) was made by Koberger. Low-priced publications were sold by the ream, indeed all books were then supplied to the trade in sheets, as was the case in England until a comparatively recent date.

Payments were made either in ready money or at

"The Reformation brought with it a general carelessness in the production of books, for which, at that time, no author received payment. Books were then almost exclusively printed from existing manuscripts. Before the Reformation the greatest care was taken to insure accuracy in the text. It is well known that Henri Estienne used to expose the proof-sheets of his famous publications in the streets of Paris that they might receive the corrections of passing scholars; and men like Erasmus, Melanchthon, and others did not grudge the trouble of correcting gratuitously for the press. Now all was changed; the Reformation brought with it hurried production and cheap prices.

"As to a number of copies in an edition there was great divergence of practice. Aldus Manutius, however, invariably printed his charming little classics in editions of 1000 copies; Amerbach's edition of St. Augustine's Works, in 11 vols, folio, consisted of no less than 2200 copies. The writings of Erasmus had a very large sale. Between the years 1500 and 1520 thirty-four editions of his 'Adagia' were printed, each consisting of 1000 copies. Of the 'Colloquia' 24,000 copies were sold. The 'Imitation of Christ' had appeared in the astounding number of ninty-nine editions when the sixteenth century began."

TIME-SAVING AGENCIES.

THE present is decidedly a time-saving age. Every effort of mechanical science has had for its objective point the economy of labor and time, and the annihilation of space, so that now one man is capable of turning out, with the aid of a machine, in a day's time, what once ten men could not have accomplished in a week; and the son of the pioneer of forty years ago, can now travel, surrounded by luxury and at comparatively small cost, in fifteen minutes over as much ground as it took his father with a team of oxen to traverse Time and space are within the grasp ten hours. and control of man-it only remains for him to discover or invent a method of imbibing and assimilating the learning of all ages in a course of three, perhaps four, easy lessons. In the meantime man is trying to evade the tedium of acquiring learning and experience, by resorting to handbooks, guides, and manuals, with varying, and, we fear, but indifferent success.

It was to meet the demand of the public for obtaining information by easy stages—especially to supply busy professional men with notes and exhaustive contributions to the subjects on which they were engaged—that the various information bureaux which now claim attention were called into existence. Probably the most successful of these is the National Press Intelligence Company, which has just entered its third year. This company was organized by Mr. Wm. F. G. Shanks, an experienced journalist, who still acts as its general manager, assisted by a staff of experienced and admirably trained co-laborers.

The several purposes of the National Press Intelligence Company, New York, may be briefly stated to be: 1. "A Bureau of Clippings"—the supplying to subscribers the current information to be found in the newspapers, weekly journals and magazines concerning them, or their business, or on any topics in which they may be interested.

2. Advertising Department—the supplying of news in letters to the country press, and in other contributions to the city press, in which, by confidential arrangements, the interests of subscribers may be looked after and advanced through notices and advertisements in the form of news, incidents, etc., without indications of the advertisement embraced therein. 3. "Back Number" Bureau-the supplying of back numbers of the principal papers of the larger cities of the Union. Bureau of Information—a general information bureau for answering all questions by experts in every line, making researches and investigations for persons at a distance; collecting evidence, etc. Inquiries can be made through this bureau as to the condition, prospects, plans, and projectors of any contemplated enterprise in any part of the country. The service is unique and valuable and its success thus far indicates that it is appreciated by the busy enterprising men of the country

The Information Bureau of Mr. E. A. Mac, of New York, the original "Original Information Bureau," if we are not mistaken, confines itself now to furnishing information relating to books Any one in doubt as to the authorship, place of publication, price, the merits of various editions, the selling price of an old book, prices realized at auction sales, etc., no matter how old the book may be, or how meagre the information for a starting-point, may entrust his queries to this agency with the assurance that if anything can be found out, it is certain to be brought to light in this quarter. Mr. Mac will also devote himself to the compilation of printed material on a given subject. His most noticeable work in this direction is a series of scrap-books of all printed matter about Jay Gould. This work made up over 3000 pages and covered the ground from 1853 to the present time.

Other agencies that may be mentioned in this connection are "The Bureau of General Information," of Washington, which offers to furnish all information obtainable in the capital of the United States; and Prof. Pierce's School, in which the art of reasoning may be learned in easy stages by correspondence. One part of this school deserves the especial attention of bookmen, namely, that which purports to teach how to ask questions, and how to consult a library.

NOTES ON CATALOGUES.

CHARLES T. DILLINGHAM has just issued a full catalogue, dated May 1, 1887, of all the standard and miscellaneous publications of Belford, Clarke & Co. (32 p. 8°.)

THE State Historical Society of Wisconsin, which has been assiduously accumulating Rebellion and Slavery literature for a quarter of a century past, and which has the reputation of having one of the finest collections of the kind in the United States, has just issued a catalogue of its treasures. This comprises 1617 titles of books and pamphlets, manuscripts of every sort, in fact, everything that illustrates the Rebellion epoch, especially the part that Wisconsin men played in it. A va'uable list. (61 p. 16°.)

On the 13th inst. begins the sale of the library and art collections of Henry de Pene du Bois, a well-known bibliophile and collector of rare discrimination. The library is particularly rich in fine binding—the work of such binders as Trautz-Bauzonnet, Dérome, Chambolle-Duru, Rouselle, and Bedford being represented. The collection of books include examples of Adus, Elzevir, Galliot du Pre, and other early master printers; modern examples being represented by first and limited editions, classics, and bibliographical works.

Some fine prints and water-colors, as well as some interesting autographs complete the collection. The catalogue of this collection has been compiled with great care and is one well worth preserving. Mr. Charles Sotheran has prefixed an interesting bibliographical proem. (George A. Leavitt & Co. 24+486 p. il. 8° pap., $1.)

JOURNALISTIC NOTES.

Scribner's Magazine has completed its first volume. It makes a handsome book externally, with its pretty olive green cloth cover and chaste ornamentation, while its contents are all that a refined literary taste can desire. There seems to be no doubt that the future of this magazine is assured.

The July number of Lippincott's Magazine will be largely a Southern one, with such names as Julia Magruder, Thomas Nelson Page, Robert Burns Wilson, Amélie Rives, etc., among its contributors. The prize essay on "Social Life at the University of Virginia" is contributed by John B, Minor, Jr., an undergraduate. The complete novel in this issue will be "At Anchor," by Miss Julia Magruder, whose novel "Across the Chasm" won her an enviable reputation.

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

CHARLES H. KERR & Co., Chicago, will publish at once "The Sailing of King Olaf, and Other Poems," by A. Williams Brotherton.

Lucas Malet, the author of "Mrs. Lorimer," has written a story for children which will be published late in the autumn.

THE FUNK & WAGNALLS base-ball nine will play the Putnam nine to-day, the Century nine on the 18th, and the J. J. Little nine on the 25th inst.

Mr. Gladstone, President Cleveland, the Duke of Argyle, and some 75 other distinguished Americans and foreigners have also contributed articles. Only 100 copies of the "Memorial" are intended for the public.

HENRY CAREY BAIRD, who has recently returned from Europe, wrote a capital letter to the Philadelphia Inquirer regarding the dangers of overcrowding emigrant ships. Mr. Baird was a passenger on La Champagne, which collided with another vessel on May 7, and his experience then taught him the necessity, not only of avoiding overcrowding, but also of providing a suitable police force on board ship to preserve order in case of accident. We congratulate Mr. Baird on his safe arrival.

We are pleased to learn from the San Francisco Chronicle that at least one member of the trade is permitted to enjoy some of the prosperity of the Pacific coast. Among the many fine residences recently erected on the Pacific Heights in San Francisco, a delightful spot overlooking the Golden Gate, one just built by Samuel Carson, of S. Carson & Co., on the north side of Pacific Street, near the northwest corner of Buchanan, is said to make itself conspicuous by its architectural beauty, and for the taste in which it is furnished. Judging from a photograph just received, Samuel Carson & Co. have as handsome a store as the senior member has a home.

LEA BROTHERS & Co., of Philadelphia, announce that they are under contract with Mr. Grote, of Berlin, to issue a translation of "A Universal History" now passing through the German press. The contributors number many of the names most famous in German historical research, and the work cannot fail to rank as one of lasting The translation has been undertaken by a number of scholars, each well known for his familiarity with the subject assigned him, while the general editorship is in the hands of Prof. John H. Wright, of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore. Though forming twelve volumes in the original, a concise translation will enable the publishers to place it in eight large octavo volumes. Chromo-lithographs and wood-cuts in profusion serve to elucidate the text, and as the HACHETTE & Co., Paris, have undertaken the sue of a series of literary biographies, somehat after the pattern of the English Men of etters. The series is to be called Les Grands crivains Français; and, as will be seen from its 1b-title-"études sur la vie, les œuvres, et l'inuence des principaux auteurs de notre littérare"—special attention will be given to the ifluence of each author upon the historical evelopment of the literature of France. The olumes, of which some eighteen have already een arranged for, will be published at two ancs, and will each have a portrait reproduced y photogravure. The first two, to appear immediately, will be "Victor Cousin," by M. Jules Simon, and "Mme. de Sévigné," by M. Gaston Boissier. Among others of special interest we may mention "George Sand," by M. Caro; "Turgot," by M. Leon Say; "Montesquieu," by M. Albert Sorel; "Villon," by M. Gaston, Paris; "Rousseau," by M. Cherbuliez; "Balzac," by M. Paul Bourget; "Musset," by M. Jules Lemaitre; "Sainte-Beuve," by M. Taine; and "Guizot," by M. Gabriel Monod. The general editor of the series, though his name does not appear on the prospectus, says the Academy, " is M. J. Jusserand, who (we may add) will shortly publish on his own account a work on the history of the novel in England, being the substance of a course of lectures he has been delivering at the College de France as suppleant to Prof. Guizot.

JUDITH:

A Chronicle of Old Virginia. By Marion Harland. New Edition. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

"The elements which in Mrs. Terhune's stories have been at once popularizing and influential, we see most strikingly in 'Judith,' the latest and artistically the most perfect, perhaps, of her novels. Fiction has afforded no more charming glimpses of Old Virginia life than are found in this delightful story, with its quaint pictures, its admirably drawn characters, its wit, and its frankness."—The Brooklyn Times.

THE

For 1887 [Eighteenth Year].

The Educational Catalogue has been found so valuable to the Trade, not only as a finding list, but for circulation among educational customers, for the purpose of soliciting orders and saving at the same time much troublesome correspondence, that its permanent continuance is recognized as a necessity.

The catalogue for this year will be entirely re-made as well as re-set, to exclude from it text-books not now in demand. It is also proposed to add a telegraphic code, for ordering books, for the use of the trade; as most dealers will not, it is presumed, desire their customers to use this, the explanation of the code system will not be included in imprint editions unless so ordered.

The catalogue follows the alphabetical system pronounced by the experience of the trade the most satisfactory for practical use. It includes a price-list arranged alphabetically by author's or editor's name, and a detailed subject-index, referring from each specific subject to authors of books on that subject, so that the advantages of both a finding list for the trade and a class catalogue for the use of schools are combined.

Publishers' prices are in all cases given—retail, if retail (in first column); "net," if "net" (in second column); where a "mailing" percentage is specified by the publisher, the "mailing price" is given in the retail column marked with an asterisk. A carefully drawn explanation in the heading, to private buyers, adapts the catalogue to the use of the retail trade.

It should be understood that, of the regular retail-price publishers, only the retail price is given, and the net prices only of those publishers who make it a practice to mail net-price lists to schools—in fact, make their net prices their regular school-supply prices. This point is emphasized in order to meet the objections raised to the quotation of net prices.

It should be well considered that any attempt at withholding, from the educational public, what the publisher, through his agents, advertisements, lists, and circulars, takes special pains to make known, must be an unwise policy. It is not objectionable, but quite proper and legitimate, to charge the retail or mailing price for single copies of any book; but the Educational Catalogue is not generally given away to single-book customers. It is intended only for those who purchase for schools in quantities. A dealer who quotes fictitious prices, or prices other than those quoted by the publisher (which prices, it is now understood, are generally still subject to a trade discount), necessarily must drive his school trade into the hands of those who solicit their orders from a catalogue, the prices of which tally with that of the publishers.

The following paragraph from a previous year's Educational Catalogue further elucidates the reasons for our strict adherence to publishers' prices: "Plainly, if it wished to sustain its official character, it was bound to respect the desire of those who have a right to stand by their prices, and who, should their established prices be disregarded, could by their public protest soon discredit the Educational Catalogue as well as those who handled it for circulation. At a time when the public mind, from causes so often discussed and lamented in these columns, is fast losing faith in honest prices, so far as books are concerned, it so f the utmost importance that there be one official list which can be consulted with confidence by the public, as well as by the trade."

In making up special orders for the Educational Catalogue, booksellers should bear in mind that it possesses not only temporary value, but will serve its purpose during the whole year. No imprint edition of less than 100 copies can be supplied. Orders for editions should be sent to us at once.

NOTES IN SEASON.

- G. W. DILLINGHAM is about to publish a summer novel entitled "The Mystery of Bar Harbor," by Alsop Leffingwell.
- T. B. Peterson Bros. have in press for immediate publication a novel by Ernest Daudet, entitled "Which? or, between two women." scene of the story is laid in Paris and the country, and the events are described with vigor and completeness of detail.

Brentano's have now ready "Tales Before ' translated into English for the first time Verelst, and preceded by an introduction by Mr. Edgar Saltus; "Mademoiselle de Maupin," by Gautier, handsomely printed on vellum-texture paper, with seventeen etchings from designs by see the situation?" The correspondent saw Toudouze; "Zola's Novels," translated without abridgment, and illustrated with full-page engravings by French artists; "Sappho," by Alphonse Daudet, a story illustrating Parisian manners, translated from the 100th French edition and beautified by thirty-two full-page engravings; and "Madame Bovary," by Gustave Flaubert, a story of provincial manners, printed on vellum-texture paper, and illustrated with six etchings.

G. P. PUTNAM have ready another volume in their admirable Story of the Nations series, which deals with "Assyria" and is by L. A. Ragozin, the writer who made the "Story of Chaldea" so fascinating; "The Federal Constitution," by John F. Baker, of the New York Bar, a retrospective view of the interesting scenes in the eventful drama which led to the adoption of the Federal Constitution, of which we now celebrate the hundredth anniversary; "Memorials of Half a Century," by Bela Hubbard, who came to Michigan fifty years ago and has described that State and its surroundings and their various changes in a style showing an enthusiastic love of nature and careful study of Western life. Also, "The Gelder Papers," edited by J. T. I., which are made up of the material gathered by his friend John Quod, who many years ago proposed to write a history of Long Island, but did not live to complete his work. Not content with knowledge derived from books, the writer examined the whole country from Coney Island to Montauk Point, and many facts found among his papers will be appreciated by students of American biography and history.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & Co. will publish soon "The Shaybacks in Camp," a delightfully informing and amusing book, describing "ten summers under canvas," by S. J. Barrows, editor of the Boston Christian Register, and Mrs. Barrows. The book is sufficiently practical to make it of much value, and so entertainingly written that it will be read with great interest even by those who have no idea of camping out for themselves. At the same time will appear Bret Harte's new story, "The Crusade of the Excelsior," which almost reaches the dimensions of a full novel, and which is likely to be in great demand for sum-mer reading; "The Law of Divorce," with the causes for which divorces are granted in different States and Territories, with a brief digest of the most important decisions, and a compilation of the most recent divorce statistics, by A. Parlett Lloyd, of Baltimore; and a cheaper edition of Bacon's remarkably full and complete "Dictionary of Boston," which answers about every question that anybody can ask about the buildings, the institutions, the societies, the important manufactories and industries, the railroads, ocean and coast steamers, and almost everything else connected with Boston.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Baltimore News asked Colonel John Hay point-blank if he were the author of "The Bread-Winners." Colonel Hay replied with his blandest smile: "In general I have not much to conceal, but this thing is the secret of six of us who have been accused by the public of this flagrancy. Yan Phou Lee, is a young Chinese who came to this country several years ago for the purpose of educating himself. After preliminary study of the language under private teachers he entered Yale College, and made rapid progress with his studies, taking high rank for schol arabip. He describes in an entertaining manner the peculiarities of child-life in China, the methods of education, the relations existing between parents and children, juvenile amusements, and a variety of other things concerning which the reader will be curious. Although written for the reading of young people, the volume will have deep interest for readers of all ages.

" Every man is a debtor to his profession, from the which, as men do of course seek to receive countenance and profit, so ought they of duly to endeavor themselves by way of amends to be a help thereunto."-LORD BACON.

It is not a little surprising that so eminently practical'a man as the one from whose lecture on the "Practical Aspects of Literary Life" we quote a portion in this issue should allow himself to become an alarmist. We are undergoing many and frequent changes, dark spots appear oftener than bright ones, and the old order seems reversed, but all the same we are not afraid that the bottom of things is quite ready to fall out as yet. Neither are we afraid that good literature of any kind will ever be crowded out by periodical literature, however good. No, no more than clearheaded men, fifty years ago, believed that steam would wipe out the equine race. On the contrary. we are firm believers in the idea that the one will stimulate the other, and that in ascending scale. The reader of periodicals and papers will become a reader of books, and though the process may be a slow one it is inevitable. The publisher may do much to hasten this end by doing his work conscientiously and in an original manner. Let him put his name to no book that he is not convinced in his own mind is the best that can be done, no matter what may be the gain, and then let every detail of the work have the stamp of the man's originality. It is this that has made the publications of the Elzevirs, Baskerville, Pickering, and men of that class, the enduring The lecturer expressed monuments they are. what we have in mind when he said: "In watching pretty large arcs of the careers of a good many literary men I have found one thing grow plainer and plainer: that is, that honest work pays and meretricious work does not pay. member an art critic saying once: 'Don't try to make iron pillars look beautiful by imitating marble pillars. You lie, and you cheat nobody. Cast capitals are not carved capitals. Mould yourself an honest iron cylinder, give it flanges | like the one I have at home, but mine is worn out.

on the top and bottom to widen its hold, and decorate that.' So in writing, get the habit of doing your own work, not of making cheap imitations of other work. Your material may be only cast-iron while another man's is marble, but yours is an honest material if you use it honestly and don't try to make it look like something else." And so in publishing, and so in everything.

DRAWBACKS OF BIBLIOMANIA IN NEW YORK.

From the Commercial Advertiser.

THERE prevails an impression that any one who really knows a valuable book when he sees it can go about the second-hand book-stores and pick up bargains in plenty. This is altogether a mistaken notion. The trouble is that so many do know a good book when they see it and so are on the lookout for rare copies. Booksellers, too-at least a majority of them—now know the relative values of books, and he is a lucky collector who nowadays gets a volume much under its actual worth. Of course different persons set different values on certain works. But as a rule the dealer's price is not often thought to be low.

A down-town bookseller who deals in all kinds of books, old and new, said to the writer who asked him for a certain edition of an old classic the other day: " If that book were here it would have been sold long before this. We have had half a dozen men in here already to-day, looking for rare old books. You have no idea how many come in every day on that errand. They come in and spend an hour, sometimes two, looking over our shelves. They rarely tell us what they are after. There are some old gentlemen who visit us regularly about three times a week. They know our stock as well as we do ourselves. one of them buys more than half a dozen volumes a year, but they seem to be quite satisfied with what they get for their labor. Of course we have a great many transient callers on the same errand. It often makes me laugh to see them looking wise and eagerly going over the shelves, evidently under the impression that they are in unexplored fields. Just as likely as not some one, who knows a good thing when he sees it, has been all over the books half an hour before. Some of them take every volume in their hands and turn over a few pages. A good many come in just to have a look at the books. There are unscrupulous dealers, and when they see that a man wants a particular book, they raise the price on him.

" But your regular book collector isn't green. Many a time have I seen him trying to get a valuable edition of some book by pretending that it was common, depending on the dealer's ignorance not to know its worth. I remember once I had a volume of the 'Tatler' that was old and worn, and I thought it was worth all of $5. I hadn't it long when one of my old visitors came in. knew nearly all my stock and he must have seen this 'Tatler' at once, but he passed it by with-out so much as touching it. Then he came back and, contrary to his custom, remarked that he didn't see anything he wanted. He was just going out of the door when he suddenly turned round and said that he had forgotten to get a book that his wife wanted. While I was wrapping it up he picked up the volume of the 'Tatler' in a careless way, saying: 'Ah, here is another of these copies of the "Tatler." 'Tis a good deal

This one is only a little better, but you will be sure to let me have it cheap and I might as well take it along.

"' Just as you like,' I replied carelessly. 'You can have it for $5.' Of course, he was thunderstruck; surely, I was making a mistake, and all that sort of thing. But I wouldn't budge, and he gave me my price with a very bad grace. fact is, these old collectors don't half care for a book unless they get it at a price they think away below cost. Then they go away chuckling at what they call their 'superior discernment.'"

"Where do you get these old books?" was

"From the libraries of these very men who collect them. When they die their libraries are often sold with the rest of their effects, and usually at ridiculously low figures. The men who buy old furniture often get them for nothing stowed away in drawers. Anyhow, they sell for very little when disposed of by an auctioneer who knows nothing about them. You see, most of our customers are comparatively poor men, who often get a book that they prize at the sacrifice of a meal."

PERIODICALS VERSUS BOOKS.*

BY HENRY HOLT.

THERE is no doubt that so far as concerns general literature, outside of technical subjects, books bound in shape for keeping are not as large a factor in American life, relatively to the present amount of wealth and culture, as they were twenty years ago. There may be as many published, but there are certainly not as many of each sold. In novels, poems, travels, essays, histories, biographies, publishers find that they can, as a rule, place but about one-third as many copies of a new-bound book as they could ten years ago. This is partly, but only partly, due to the great development of newspapers and periodicals. Many a man who used to read a book of some kind on Sunday now takes all his time to read his Sunday paper. The Sunday edition of a great daily actually contains as much reading-matter as an average novel, and it can be had for five cents, where the book costs, or used to cost, a dollar. A man is to-day more thoroughly a citizen of the world than thirty years ago he could be of his own country. To keep alive to these wide interests, he must read vast amounts of matter which would be stale long before it could get between the covers of a book.

In view of this, then, begins to come up the question: "Will the coming man read books?

Well, one is not as ready to set up for a prophet when he has been out of college twenty-five years, as he is before he cracks the college eggshell, but I will risk it so far as to say that the knowledge of the future is going to be stored, much more generally than the knowledge of the present is, in vast sets of bound periodicals with elaborate indexes. The drift in that direction is very plain in the libraries now. It does not seem probable that the number of periodicals can ever be so great relatively to the number of people as that of books now is. There are only about a dozen that supply any literature worthy of a name—I mean non-technical literature. books of similar character there are published every year many hundreds. But books do not average a sale of a thousand apiece. Probably not one in a year sells fifty thousand. We now have three good magazines selling far more than a hundred thousand a month. If each copy of such a magazine displaced a copy of a book, these three magazines would in a year kill off five million books. Of course, they do not kill off that many books, but they kill a great many.

Now note the effect on the character of litera-The books that are killed are, of course, mainly those that are least fit to survive. On the other hand, the literature furnished by the periodicals is, on the whole, the best of its kind, for the enormous circulation possible to the magazines enables them to pay the author better than books alone can.

NOTES ON AUTHORS.

Mr. O. B. Frothingham is editing the papers of the late David Atwood Wasson, litterateur and independent preacher.

FRIEDRICH SPIELHAGEN has completed a new novel, called "Noblesse Oblige." It is said to belong to the species of historic romances, thus differing from all his previous romances.

MISS MARY CLAYTON BLACK, a daughter of the late Jeremiah Black, is about to publish a biography of her father. As she has all his papers, she should produce an interesting book.

WE learn from the London Figaro that Miss Florence Warden, the well-known novelist and actress (author of "The House on the Marsh"), was married in London to Mr. George E. James. Her real maiden name was Florence Alice Price.

GEORGE D. HUNT, Salem, Ohio, has completed the Ms. of a book entitled "The Poetry of Teach-" It is to be a compilation of poetic articles relating to teaching in its legitimate sense, and in the interest of education.

W. W. THOMAS, of Portland, Me., who was for many years U. S. Consul at Stockholm, and afterwards U. S. Minister to Norway and Sweden, has written a work on the manners and customs of the people of Norway and Sweden and the courts at Stockholm, which is to be published simultaneously in English and Swedish in New-York and Stockholm. The first sheets of the book are to appear in Harper's Magazine in a few months.

JOURNALISTIC NOTES.

HON. DAVID A. WELLS will contribute to the July Popular Science Monthly the first of an important series of papers on "The Economic Dis-turbances Since 1873." Mr. Wells proposed to review the history of these disturbances, and to point out agencies to which such wide-reaching commercial depression may be properly attribnted.

THE July Catholic World will be unusually full in the department of fiction and poetry. Besides the instalment of Rosa Mulholland's novel, "A Fair Emigrant," now nearly concluded, there will be a pleasant little "Sussex Story," by Miss Agnes Power, and a translation from Count Léon Tolstol by Ellis Schreiber. The poems are by William D. Kelley, "In the Starlight," and Mrs.
Mary Elizabeth Blake, "A Birthday." Mrs. Lucy
C. Lillic will also have a sketch entitled "A Great Lady."

^{*}An extract from an address on the "Practical Aspect of the Literary Life," delivered at Yale University, an abstract of which was first published in The Writer.

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

LAUGHTON, MACDONALD & Co. have purchased the entire stock of Houghton, Mifflin & Co. that was damaged at the recent fire, and are now offering it at a small per cent. of its retail price.

THE Indian Rights Association, 136 Filbert St., Phila., announce that a new edition of "The Latest Studies on Indian Reservations" will be ready immediately. The first edition of 2500 was exhausted directly after publication.

SAMUEL H. ZAHM & Co., Lancaster, Pa., will publish on the 20th "Extempore on a Wagon," a metrical narrative of a journey from Bethlehem, Pa., to the Indian town of Goshen, Ohio, in the autumn of 1803, by George Henry Loskiel, episcopus fratrum, translated, with notes, by J. Max The book will be handsomely gotten up, Hark. and limited to 200 copies.

B. WESTERMANN & Co. are the American agents for I. G. Icazbalceta's "Bibliografia Mexicana del siglo xvi.," or a complete bibliography of books printed in Mexico in the sixteenth century. Numerous titles, etc., are reproduced in fac-simile. The edition is limited, and subscriptions will be taken only for the complete work, which is to be in two volumes.

"On the 1st inst.," says the Mail and Express, "action was taken at the American Tract Society to sell the Tract House and close the bindery, and to discontinue the Illustrated Christian Weekly, which does not pay. Hereafter the business and benevolent departments of the society will be kept separate—not discontinued, by any means, but put upon what is expected to be a better working basis."

"IT would surprise most Cincinnatians," says the Cincinnati Times-Star, "if they were told that 48,000 volumes of a single series had just been published in this city, yet such is the fact. Robert Clarke & Co., that long-established house of booksellers and publishers, has done this, and it has all been done so quietly that the general public has never heard of it. The books in question are the Ohio State reports, sixty-four volumes in each set, and they are models typographically. They have had an enormous circulation in those Western States and Territories which adopted the Ohio code, and though the edition was large, yet it seems as if it would fall short of the demand."

THE J. B. LIPPINCOTT COMPANY have arranged to publish the "Report of the Commission appointed by the University of Pennsylvania to investigate Modern Spiritualism, in accordance with the request of the late Henry Seybert." Considering the high standing of the university, as well as that of the individual members of the committee, this report will likely prove the most valuable addition of recent years to the scientific knowledge of this abstruse subject. The same firm announce "Bellona's Husband," a new novel by Hudor Genone, author of "Inquirendo Island." We learn that the work has for its object to illustrate, by means of romance and satire, the underlying principles in human life, and to show, by a species of reductio ad absurdum, the nature of heredity, education, habit, and opportunity, and the bearing of all influences upon character.

For 1887 (Fifteenth Year).

Large 8vo, about 3000 pages. With Duplex Index.

The Trade-List Annual for 1887 will contain:

- t. The latest Catalogues of American Publishers, contributed by themselves and arranged alphabetically by the firm-names.
- 2. A complete list by author, title, and subject of all books recorded in the Publish-ERS' WEEKLY from July, 1886, to June, 1887.
- 3. The "EDUCATIONAL CATALOGUE" for 1887, which is used by the entire trade and educational interests as the most representative reference-list of School-books.

The above Lists, all bound in one volume, present in their combination so convenient and time-saving a working-tool as to make it indispensable to every one who has any interest in the purchase and sale of books.

In view of the New Annual Catalogue, the full reprint of the Publishers' Weekly full-title record is omitted; but, in its place, the brief three-column index is replaced by a much more full short-title catalogue of all books recorded between July, 1886, and June, 1887.

The patent "DUPLEX INDEX" having given such general satisfaction, we have decided to apply it in the future to all copies of the "Annual." Volumes supplied with the "DUPLEX INDEX" have the alphabet printed on the concave surface as well as on the margin of the page, which enables instantaneous reference, whether the book is open or shut.

The price of the book before publication will be ONE DOLLAR AND A HALF net, including the index. Delayed or unpaid subscriptions are not entitled to the subscription price ($1.50) but will be charged at $2.00.

Unless special shipping directions are received, copies ready for delivery will be despatched by express unpaid. Parties so desiring can have their copies sent by mail, or by prepaid book-rate express for 80 cents per copy extra.

Important Announcement!

WARNE'S CROWN LIBRARY

WE have much pleasure in announcing to the public that we have commenced to issue, under the above title, an entirely New Series, drawn from the works of some of the most Eminent Authors, and embodying many celebrated Novels, as well as other miscellaneous writings which are and have been generally acknowledged as holding a foremost place in English Literature.

The "Crown Library"—a list of the First Sixteen Volumes of which is appended—is issued to meet a different demand from our now well-known series, "THE CHANDOS CLASSICS;" thus the two libraries will run side by side, both being drawn from entirely distinct branches of literature.

The volumes will be "Unabridged" and printed from the Best Editions extant, composed in a uniform style from New Type. They will be very carefully printed on good paper, and bound in a neat cloth cover, paper wrapper.

At the present time, when cheap 12mos indiscriminately printed (generally) from old and wornout plates are flooding the market, the Publishers cannot but think the trade will welcome something better—something produced in uniform and modern style and with some regard to the subjects embraced in the series. They therefore respectfully request the trade to order samples of this series from the list appended. Other volumes in preparation will be announced at fixed intervals.

NOTES IN SEASON.

ROBERTS BROS. have just published "A Lad's Love: a Campobello story," by Arlo Bates, author of the "Wheel of Fire," etc.; "Ourselves and Our Neighbors," short chats on social topics, by Louise Chandler Moulton; also, cheaper editions (in paper covers) of "To Rome on a Tricycle—two pilgrims' progress," by J. and E. R. Pennell, and of "The New History of Sandford and Merton," by F. C. Burnand.

FREDERICK WARNE & Co. have commenced the publication of a new series of celebrated novels to be known as Warne's Crown Library. The volumes will be unabridged and printed from the best editions extant. They will be composed in a uniform style from new type, carefully printed on good paper, and bound in a neat cloth binding. The first volumes will be "Valentine Vox," "Ernest Maltravers" "Alice," "The Caudle Lectures," "Peter Simple," "Jack Hinton," "Ivanhoe," "The Deerslayer," and others which will be found enumerated in Warne's advertisement elsewhere in this issue.

HARPER & BROS. will publish immediately Sidney Colvin's long-promised "Keats" in the English Men of Letters series. The Athenaum understands that the work "has been written in considerable measure from manuscript materials, and contains, in addition to a number of minor facts relating to the poet and to his family, the correction in one or two important points of the received accounts as to the order and date of composition of his poems." It adds that the volume differs from its predecessors in the same series inasmuch as it contains an appendix in which doubtful points are discussed, and pièces justificatives printed in full.

MACMILLAN & Co. have just ready The Victoria edition of Shakspere in three volumes, uniform with the single-volume Tennyson, and furnished with an entirely new glossary by Mr. Aldis Wright. The text of this edition has been taken from the Globe Shakespeare, edited by W. G. Clark and W. A. Wright. The get-up is perfect. Handy in shape, easily held in the hand, set in beautifully clear type, and exquisitely printed on good white paper, this edition will find favor with every lover of good and well-made books. The price in neat flexible cloth binding is $5 for the three volumes. They have also nearly ready a Clarendon Press edition of Boswell's Johnson, edited by the author of "Dr. Johnson: his friends and his critics." The Daily London News describes it as "beautifully printed; bound in excellent taste, annotated with almost exhaustive knowledge and with exemplary accuracy, and "a Boswell which a man can recommend to a friend." Portraits, a concordance of Johnson's sayings, and an elaborate index are promised.

THE WORTHINGTON COMPANY are devoting all their energies to the preparation of a number of most delightful books for the young. Prominent among these is one by Mary A. Lathbury, entitled "Twelve Times One." This lady's former books, "From Meadow-Sweet to Mis-tletoe," "Ring-a-Round-a-Rosy" and "Seven Little Maids," have won for the author so many friends that it seems superfluous to add any word of praise in connection with her forthcoming book. The book, which is full of charmingly graceful pictures of child-life, will be sumptuously printed in thirteen colors, and will make pretensions to rank among the finest art-books of the year. One of the children's special favorites is of course "Worthington's Annual," now issued for a number of years. The volume contains short stories, sketches, poems, wise sayings, etc., and is magnificently illustrated with hundreds of colored and tinted plates. The "Royal Picture-Book" is a new collection of stories and pictures, as is also "Worthington's Album." Some other handsome books are: "Young America's Picture-Book,"
"Worthington Sunday," "The Daisy Chain,"
"Merry Little People," "Baby Hours," "Children at Home," and "Baby Dear." The three latter ones are new editions with bright colored æsthetic covers. They are also preparing new editions of "Hans C. Andersen's Tales," "Æsop's Fables," "Hans C. Andersen's Tales," "Æsop's Fables," and "New Gulliver's Travels," edited for children. We may also add "Baby Life," "Around the Ring," "Peek-a-boo," "In the Fields," and "Our of School" to the list. Last but not lesse there "Knickerbocker Junior," filled with the chokes reading and superbly illustrated. All these tunes are bound in strong covers, printed in a with artiking designs, and heavily varnished. with striking designs, and heavily vamished

A party of ladies and gentlemen snowed in at Tuxedo, where they had assembled to spend the Christmas holiday, while away the time with stories. The first story, "Carmelite Castro," is a charmingly pathetic tale of California many years ago in Bret Harte's style; "In the shadow of Monte Diablo" is also of California. The other stories, "The doctor's rival," "A point of law," and "In solitude," are unusually good.

Many years ago Mr. John Quod, a friend of the editor, prepared to write a history of Long Island. He did not confine his investigations to books alone, but examined the whole country from Coney Island to Montauk Point, and committed the information gained to paper. He did not live to complete the work, and after his death the papers came into the editor's hand, and, at his written request, he has prepared a portion of them for the public. The book is largely composed of the histories and tales of departed worthies, whose names are irrevocably associated with the spots rendered classic by their deeds and adventures. The style is original and attractive.

The author aims to teach reading rapidly by a phonetic system which pays special regard to the correct pronunciation and clear utterance of the pupils. He justly asserts that English-speaking people have more frequently an unintelligible, mumbling utterance than the speakers of other languages. He claims that the alphabet used is easily learned, and that the rules for spelling according to pronunciation have been formed so as to retain the ordinary spelling in as many words as possible, so that when pupils are promoted to ordinary books they very easily learn to read them. His idea is not so much to introduce his system of phonetics, as to help pupils recognize at sight the sounds the words should have.

Mr. William Duncan, for thirty years a devoted missionary of religion and civilization in British Columbia, is now on his way to Washington to ask leave of the United States to allow the Metlakahtlans, a tribe of Christianized Indians, to settle in Alaska, where they may be free from the church and state rule of England. The book is a history of the tribe and a description of their country. It is estimated that it will require $50,000 to remove their huts to Alaska, a distance of thirty miles, and to secure them hunting and fishing grounds to enable them to earn an honest livelihood.

GEORGE W. CRANE & Co., Topeka, Kan., in sending us their unique "Brief Law Catalogue," call our attention to the fact that they keep the type of this catalogue standing at all times, revising at intervals of six weeks to two months, and bringing it up to date. While it is obvious that the list can make no pretension of completeness, it does contain all leading works used in the West, and especial effort is given to including latest issues, not to be found in other catalogues, which from their size can only be issued at long inter-

" Every man is a debtor to his profession, from the which, as men do of course seek to receive countenance and profit, so ought they of duty to endeavor themselves by way of amends to be a help thereunto."-LORD BACON.

THE EDUCATIONAL CATALOGUE.

WE are pushing work on the EDUCATIONAL CATALOGUE as rapidly as possible, and if the sixteen or eighteen houses who have not yet anwered our request for corrected lists will send us heir material at once, we hope to be able to ssue the CATALOGUE as promptly as in former rears.

It is proposed this year to increase the value of the CATALOGUE by condensing the informaion as much as practicable, by leaving out such ooks as are not considered text-books pure and imple by the trade, and by excluding from it ext-books not now in demand.

We have also been induced to add a telegraphic ode for ordering text-books, which it is hoped rill replace the individual codes issued by publishrs for their own books, and by wholesale dealers, y a uniform method for the entire trade. ode is based on the name of publisher, name of uthor, and designation of individual book (somemes by initials and sometimes necessarily arbiary)-a natural system, giving more opportuity to catch possible errors than where hapazard words or signs are associated arbitrarily ith each book. This method also allows codegns for new books to be interpolated in future ttalogues without breaking down the system.

In other respects the CATALOGUE will follow ie alphabetical system, which has been observed iring the past years. The attention of the trade invited to our advertisement on another page. hich gives full particulars and prices of imprint litions. We trust that, as in former years, we ill have the continued support of both branches the trade for this undertaking.

MR. C. N. CASPAR writes us in regard to his "Directory of the American Book, News, and Stationery Trades," that "the work is steadily progressing, but as the labor is simply enormous, it will take some time yet before the manuscript is ready for the printer. . . . To judge from the present appearances, there will be no money in this enterprise, but I will try my best to make it a success. Under all circumstances I will 'hold the fort' and will publish the Directory no matter what the loss, if any, may be." This sentiment does the writer all honor, and we hope that the trade will appreciate the labor of Mr. Caspar sufficiently to insure him against loss, if they cannot assure him compensation for the time he is devoting to their interests. And we know from experience that the majority of the trade is willing and ready to do this.

THE AUSTRALIAN BOOK-TRADE.

[Special Correspondence of the Publishers' Weekly.] BRISBANE, QUEENSLAND, April 26, 1887.

THE United States is not the only country which can boast of the large and rapid growth of its Brisbane with a population of about cities. 25,000 in 1880 had grown to 52,000 by the census of 1886, and the end is not yet, for look where you will throughout the city you are confronted by handsome and massive buildings in course of erection. Still, the present population is not large for the capital and chief city of a colony having a territory of nearly 700,000 square miles, the inhabitants of which number only some 325,000; a colony larger than France and Germany combined, and, to come nearer home, nearly three times the size of Texas—a country, moreover, abounding in mineral wealth, and contain-

For a city of the size Brisbane may pride itself on some large and fine book-stores, one of the largest, if not the largest retail book-store of the Colonies being situated here, the proprietor of which, by the way, is at present travelling in the United States, to try, as he informed me, to pick up some new ideas from the American trade. To our glory be it said, Americans have a great reputation in this part of the world for new ideas and general go-aheaditiveness. Melbourne, the largest and busiest city of the Colonies, is always spoken of as being so like an American city because of its rapid growth and ready adaptation of the latest improvements and fashions.

That new ideas may be of advantage to some of the booksellers here can readily be seen when conversing with them; the bookseller in many of the towns never having learned his profession at all, but handling books as he would groceries or tobacco, and very often along with them. In going through your samples he weighs the book in his hand as if it were to be sold by the pound, and ignores the contents, as if that was not of the slightest consequence; and perhaps it does not matter—to him. I was recently asked by one of these worthies if the "Republic of Plato" was a new novel, and if it had been out long.

Do not imagine that all of the Australian booktrade are of this sort; indeed, many of them are most intelligent, well-educated men, coming from some of the best book-shops in England to find scope and ready occupation for their knowledge in the new world, but the other type are frequently to be met with, and if you hear of a bookseller who has been a truckman or laborer, the more honor, I think, is due him for his advance in life to a superior position.

Queensland is also feeling the depression general in the other Colonies, and business is by no means what it should be, but with the immense natural resources of the country it must eventually become one of the most important of the British Colonial possessions.

ANDREW LANG ON INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT.

From Longman's Magazine.

For my own private part, I cannot pretend to care much about the matter, as Mr. Munro does not sell my engaging works on the "Evolution of Ritual," and so forth, at sixpence. Perhaps it would not remunerate him to do so. But the person one is sorry for is the American novelist. How can the young and ardent literary "School-marm" hope to sell her "Popsy's Ways: a Connecticut idyl," for $1.50, when you can have "Treasure Island," "Kidnapped," and "The New Arabian Nights" all in one hideous pamphlet for ten cents? The native American producer is ruined by English cheap labor, by kidnapped labor, by labor which is not even paid for its keep, though the laborer has one of the privileges of slavery, and is both flogged and preached at, sometimes, in the reviews of the land of his captivity. However, the native American producer is not likely to demonstrate, or agitate, or break windows, or ship dynamite, or adopt any other of the constitutional methods by which, in free countries, the oppressed are wont to appeal for justice. They can't even boycott. Suppose all American authors boycotted Messrs. Blank, they would not be one penny the worse. They would go on publishing English novels for ten cents.

OBITUARY.

SINCLAIR TOUSEY.

SINCLAIR TOUSEY, president of the American News Company, died at his residence in New York City, at noon, on the 16th inst. He had been in ill health for several years, from a complication of diseases, but was able to attend business until about a month ago. Three days previous to his death his symptoms became alarming. He was stricken with apoplexy the night before his death, and passed away quietly, surrounded by the members of his family.

Mr. Tousey was born in New Haven, Conn., on July 18, 1815. His father's name was Zerah Tousey. Sinclair's parents were in humble circumstances and died when he was yet a child. His ancestors for many generations were New England people, one of them being the Rev. Thomas Tousey, who was prominent in colonial times. Receiving the rudiments of a commonschool education, he was employed at the age of ten years in a cotton factory in Dutchess County, New York. In his thirteenth year he was bound

New York. Here he spent three years. He then started to walk to Newtown, Conn., a distance of more than one hundred miles. At Newtown he first engaged himself to a farmer and then became apprenticed to a carpenter. He was working at this trade when induced by some relatives to come to New York. Upon arrival here he became a clerk in a grocery store, where he remained until 1832. He was taken ill with cholera, but, recovering, went to Saybrook, Conn., and in the summer of 1833 engaged himself to a farmer near New London for $9 a month.

In 1853, after having acted as local agent for the New York Transcript, the Sun, and Herald with but indifferent success, and after having established and published the Louisville Daily Times, he returned to New York and entered the firm of Ross & Jones, who had a news agency on Nassau Street, the firm-name becoming Ross, Jones & Tousey. Subsequently, when Mr. Jones retired, the firm-name became Ross & Tousey, and here the deceased by his indomitable energy and enterprise laid the foundation of a business that has grown to gigantic proportions.

In 1857 Ross & Tousey moved from 103 to 121 Nassau Street, and in May, 1860, Mr. Tousey bought out Mr. Ross. At first this concern conducted an up-town delivery service at a time when travelling in New York was a slow process. Little by little the business of the firm was extended outside of New York, until it had increased from $150,000 per year to $1,000,000. In 1864 the American News Company was formed and succeeded to Mr. Tousey's business, Mr. Tousey becoming president of the company, an office he occupied until his death. The company was composed of Mr. Tousey, Mr. George Dexter, Mr. Henry Dexter, Mr. John Hamilton, Mr. S. W. Johnson, Mr. P. Farrelly, and Mr. J. E. Tousey.

The deceased leaves a wife and four sons.

REV. R. D. HITCHCOCK.

THE Rev. Dr. Roswell D. Hitchcock, President of Union Theological Seminary, died at South Somerset, near Fall River, Mass., on the 16th inst. Dr. Hitchcock was born on a farm at East Machias, Me., August 15, 1817. He was graduated at Amherst College in 1836, and spent the following year teaching school at Jaffrey, N. H. He entered Andover Seminary in 1838, preached a year in Waterville, Me., and in 1845 became pastor of the First Congregational Church of Exeter, N. H. He resigned the pastorate to accept the Collins Professorship of Natural and Revealed Religion in Bowdoin College, but before taking the chair he passed a year abroad in Halle and Berlin. Union Seminary called him to fill the Washburn chair in 1855, and he was elected to the Presidency in 1880.

During the late war Dr. Hitchcock took a decided stand on the side of the Government, delivering a number of earnest addresses on National affairs. He published a "Life of Edward Robinson" (1863), a "Complete Analysis of the Bible" (1869), "Socialism" (1878), with Drs. Eddy and Schaff "Hymns and Songs of Praise" and "Hymns and Songs for Social and Sabbath Worship." With Professor Francis Brown he published an edition of "The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles," and soon after the publication of the Revised New Testament, in 1881, he preout to a farmer in what was then called Central | pared a volume giving the American revisers' preferences in the text, and those of the English committee in an appendix. In addition to these books he published numerous orations, addresses, and sermons. He also contributed many important articles to the religious press. From 1863 to 1870 he was one of the editors of The American Theological Review. He also contributed many articles to The Presbyterian Quarterly. He was one of the associate editors of "Johnson's Universal Encyclopædia."

MARK HOPKINS.

MARK HOPKINS, former President of Williams College, died in Williamstown, Mass., on the 17th inst., aged 85 years. Physicians give it as their opinion that a general breaking up alone was the cause of death. Dr. Hopkins was graduated at Williams College in 1824 with the first honor. He was appointed a tutor in 1825, serving two years, and receiving the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He was appointed Professor of Moral Philosophy in 1836. He was made a D.D. by Harvard and Dartmouth, and LL. D. by the Board of Regents of the University of New York. The most distinguished of his publications have been lectures on "Evidences of Christianity" and all ecture on "Moral Philosophy" and baccalaureate sermons.

JOURNALISTIC NOTES.

THE June number of Shakespeariana has an article by Fanny Davenport on Beatrice.

GEORGE BANCROFT contributes to the July Century a short paper on "An Incident in the Life of John Adams." Mr. Bancroft spent an afternoon in the company of the second President of the United States, in 1818—when Mr. Adams was three or four years younger than Mr. Bancroft is now.

THE London Athenaum announces that having letermined in future to print in July its articles on the continental literature of the preceding welve months, it proposes to publish in its number for July 2 a set of articles on the literary ictivity of France and the other most important countries of the Continent during the six months hat will have elapsed since the issue of its first number for January.

In the July issue of the Cosmopolitan, which will be the first to be published in New York, will be given the history of "Barriers Burned Away," by Mr. E. P. Roe himself, in an article entitled 'My First Novel." The history of the composition of an author's first book which ultimately eached a sale of 135,000 copies cannot fail to be nteresting. The Cosmopolitan will appear in a new cover, the design of which was furnished by Ar. S. White.

The illustrations in Professor D. A. Sargent's rticle on "The Physical Proportions of the Typical Man," which will appear in Scrimer's Magazine for July, are from photographs of thetes and diagrams furnished by the author. This article will be of special interest to young nen engaged in out-door sports and general thletics, and will also be of unusual value to eachers and parents as a guide to them in the physical development of their pupils and children.

NOTES ON AUTHORS.

THE EARL'OF LYTTON has just issued a new volume of poems entitled "After Paradise; or, legends of exile."

THE article on "Victorian Literature" in the current number of Blackwood is understood to be from the pen of Mrs. Oliphant.

MISS MARY A. M. HOPPUS (Mrs. Alfred Marks) has just completed a story the scene of which is laid in Rome in the time of Domitian.

A NEW novel, which some English critics of repute think shows promise, is to come out soon called "An Ugly Duckling," by Henry Erroll.

THE name of the author of Mrs. Siddons in the Famous Women series should be Nina H. Kennard instead of Nina A. Kennard as erroneously printed on title.

It is reported that the author of "Through the Gates of Gold," issued by Roberts Bros., is a young lady named Mabel Collins and that she is also the author of "Light on the Path," published by Cupples & Hurd.

COL. FRANK A. BURR is engaged in writing a history of the cavalry operations of the war. This book will include a fairly complete account of General Sheridan's career, and will describe some of the most dramatic events of the war. The volume will be brought out by the Historical Publishing Company, of Philadelphia, and will be profusely illustrated.

JOHN BARTLETT, the author of the popular "Familiar Quotations" and "Shakespeare Phrase-Book," has copyrighted "A New and Complete Concordance or Verbal Index to the Dramatic Works of Shakespeare." It is to be a complete concordance of words, phrases, and passages to be found in the plays of Shakespeare, giving each word in its various uses—thus presenting a thorough index to the thoughts of the great dramatist. The passages are given so full and entire that in most cases it will be found unnecessary to consult the plays themselves. The adopted text is that of the Globe edition, edited by Messrs. Clark and Wright. The volume will contain 1600 pages, 9½ x 6½ inches (type measurement).

LITERARY AND TRADE NOTES.

In the Library of Anglo-Saxon Poetry, Ginn & Co. will publish this summer Zupitza's "Elene," edited, by permission of Prof. Zupitza, by Prof. Henry Johnson, Ph.D. (Berlin), of Bowdoin College. The text may be expected by July 1, the notes and glossary shortly afterwards.

DE WOLFE, FISKE & Co., having purchased the plates of "Dickens' Works" formerly owned by George Routledge & Sons, have had them thoroughly overhauled and repaired and will offer a new edition to the trade next month in a handsome style of binding with entirely new dies.

Benjamin & Bell will publish in the fall "A Selection from the Poetry of Leigh Hunt." With a prefatory sketch and a reproduction of a portrait in water-colors by Sir David Wilkie, hitherto unpublished and now in the possession of the publishers. The volume will be daintily printed.

GINN & Co. will publish on the 15th of July "A Practical Rhetoric," by John F. Genung, of Amherst College. The work is said to be characterized by good sense, simplicity, originality, availability, completeness, and ample illustration. It is particularly adapted for use in high schools, seminaries, and colleges.

CHARLES SCRIBNER & Sons, through the police, caution the public against a man whose name is supposed to be Sherwood. Without any authority he is collecting subscriptions for Scribner's Magasine. He is 25 years old, 5 feet 6 inches in height, ruddy and round-faced, and has dark hair, eyes, and mustache. He wears a cutaway coat and a soft drab hat.

ROBERTS BROS. announce that hereafter the name of the translator of their issue of Balzac's novels, Miss Katharine Prescott Wormeley, will appear on the title-page. The translator is the daughter of Admiral Wormeley, formerly of the English Navy. She has a thorough knowledge French, obtained through a twelve years' residence in France before making America her home. She now resides at Newport, R. I. The success attending the issue of Balzac's novels by Roberts Bros. may be justly attributed to the excellent work of this talented and accomplished

ANDERSON & KRUM, who succeeded to the stationery department of Baker, Pratt & Co., call attention to the improved styles of The Johnson Revolving Bookcases. These cases have long since won for themselves an enviable reputation for convenience, compactness, and ca-pacity as well as durability. They are made in four sizes, from one 14 inches in height to be placed on a table or desk to one 52 inches high,

KANSAS CITY is preparing an invitation to be It will be in the sent to President Cleveland. form of a book 12 x 17 inches in size. It will be bound in embossed seal leather, and, when finished, will have cost not far from $1000. first pages will be devoted to allegorical drawings in which graceful female figures will personify Kansas City, the States of Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Indian Territory, Colorado, Texas, and New Mexico, a page being devoted to each. Following these will be the invitation and many pages of names, engrossed from lists of signatures obtained by solicitors who will visit citizens for the purpose. Two thousand names were secured on Saturday, and the total list will be 30,000 or more. George Barse, Jr., is the artist to whom the work has been entrusted.

"Subscribers to John Payne's translation of The Arabian Nights," says the Critic's "Lounger," "will be glad to know that their subscriptions can now be filled. It may be remembered that a little over a year ago, just after two of the promised nine volumes had been published by R. Worthington, Anthony Comstock made a raid upon the books, and the publication was stopped. Mr. Worthington had taken probably 400 subscriptions at $45 per set, and his subscribers were clamorous. They saw two odd volumes on their hands, with little prospect of completing the set. Now, however, they can be happy again, for a firm in Canada, 'Macmullen & Co.,' of Toronto, have printed the lacking seven volumes and shipped them to New York, where all orders may be filled. There is no publisher's imprint on the new volumes. The title-page of the first two say 'printed for Richard Worthington,' but these are 'printed for subscribers only.'

G. E. STECHERT, N. Y., invites subscribers to the "Corpus Schwenkfeldianorum," which is to comprise sixteen volumes, bringing all the essential documents of Schwenkfeld and his sect in chronological sequence, with English notes and prolegomena. Schwenkfeld was born about 1400 in Silesia. He embraced the Reformation with great enthusiasm, but afterward developed its ideas in a manner that brought him in conflict both with the Romanists and Protestants. He valiantly opposed ecclesiasticism and founded a sect in Silesia which in many essentials bears strong resemblance to the Puritans. In 1734 most of them emigrated to America and settled in Pennsylvania, where they still number about 1000 souls, supporting their own churches and Prof. Chester D. Hartranft, of the Hartford Theological Seminary, will edit the work, which, emanating from so well-known a specialist in ecclesiatical history, will be scholarly and of great historical importance. The subscription list closes on July 1, and it behooves libraries and scholars to be in time in sending their orders.

THE Faculty of Political Science of Columbia College proposes to publish "a series of systematic works covering the entire field of political science proper and of the allied sciences of public law and economics," to comprise nine volumes. to be entitled: "History of Political Theories," by Archibald Alexander; "Comparative Constitutional Law and Politics," by John W. Burgess; "Comparative Constitutional Law of the Whitridge: "Historical and Practical Political Economy," by Richmond M. Smith, "Historical and Comparative Science of Finance," by Edwin R. A. Seligman; "Comparative Administrative Law and Science," by Frank J. Goodnow; "International Law," by Theodore W. Dwight; "Historical and Comparative Invisorations." "Historical and Comparative Jurisprudence," by Munroe Smith; "Literature of Political Science," by George H. Baker. The method of treatment will be historical, comparative, and statistical; and it will be the aim of the writers to present the latest results of institutional development and of scientific thought in Europe and America. Each book will, of course, express the views of its author; but each book will be submitted by the author to his associates for criticism and suggestions. The series will thus rest upon a real co-operation of publicists, jurists, and economists. Each volume will be indexed by subjects and authors, and the last volume will contain a The first topical index to the entire series. volume may be looked for this winter. It is not expected that the series will be completed before 1890 or '91.

MR. HAGGARD'S new book, "Allan Quatermain," will appear next month. It is a sequel to "King Solomon's Mines."

H. GREVEL & Co., London, will publish at once an English translation of Prof. Maspero's "Archéologie Egyptienne," by Miss Amelia B. Edwards.

THE work entitled "Sedan, the Downfall of the Second Empire," by Mr. George Hooper, which was announced some time since, will be issued shortly as a companion volume to his "Waterloo, the Downfall of the First Napoleon." volume, which has been compiled from authentic sources, will contain a general map and plans of the principal actions.

T. FISHER UNWIN, London, has recently published a volume of æsthetic and descriptive essays by Miss Violet Paget ("Vernon Lee") under the title of "Juvenilia." Some of the essays all in her earlier vein) have been partly re-printed from English and Italian reviews—in the latter case, of course, translated—but the bulk of the volume is made up of new matter which now appears for the first time.

W. H. Allen & Co., London, announce a new series of short historical biographies, under the title of the Statesmen series, of which the first volumes will appear in the autumn. It is intended that the list shall be thoroughly comprehensive, including the famous makers of continental as well as of English history, and the more notable of the legislators and administrators of the Indian and Colonial empire. Mr. Lloyd C. Sanders is the editor of the series.

THE Pall Mall Gazette notes that several of the English publishers celebrated the Queen's jubilee in their own way—Rivingtons by doub-ing their clerks' salaries for the month, John Murray by giving his clerks a present of three months' wages, another West End publisher by distributing a bonus varying from £25 downward to each of his employés, and one of the large city houses following in the same wake. Two of the leading Edinburgh firms also determined that their employes should not have empty pockets on Jubilee Day.

For 1887 [Eighteenth Year].

The Educational Catalogue has been found so valuable to the Trade, not only as a finding list, but for circulation among educational customers, for the purpose of soliciting orders and saving at the same time much troublesome correspondence, that its permanent continuance is recognized as a necessity.

The catalogue for this year will be entirely re-made as well as re-set, to exclude from it text-books not now in demand. It is also proposed to add a telegraphic code, for ordering books, for the use of the trade; as most dealers will not, it is presumed, desire their customers to use this, the explanation of the code system will not be included in imprint editions unless so ordered.

The catalogue follows the alphabetical system pronounced by the experience of the trade the most satisfactory for practical use. It includes a price-list arranged alphabetically by author's or editor's name, and a detailed subject-index, referring from each specific subject to authors of books on that subject, so that the advantages of both a finding list for the trade and a class catalogue for the use of schools are combined.

Publishers' prices are in all cases given—retail, if retail (in first column); "net," if "net" (in second column); where a "mailing" percentage is specified by the publisher, the "mailing price" is given in the retail column marked with an asterisk. A carefully drawn explanation in the heading, to private buyers, adapts the catalogue to the use of the retail trade.

It should be understood that, of the regular retail-price publishers, only the retail price is given, and the net prices only of those publishers who make it a practice to mail net-price lists to schools—in fact, make their net prices their regular school-supply prices. This point is emphasized in order to meet the objections raised to the quotation of net prices.

It should be well considered that any attempt at withholding, from the educational public, what the publisher, through his agents, advertisements, lists, and circulars, takes special pains to make known, must be an unwise policy. It is not objectionable, but quite proper and legitimate, to charge the retail or mailing price for single copies of any book; but the Educational Catalogue is not generally given away to single-book customers. It is intended only for those who purchase for schools in quantities. A dealer who quotes fictitious prices, or prices other than those quoted by the publisher (which prices, it is now understood, are generally still subject to a trade discount), necessarily must frive his school trade into the hands of those who solicit their orders from a catalogue, the prices of which tally with that of the publishers.

The following paragraph from a previous year's Educational Catalogue further elucidates the reasons for our strict adherence to publishers' prices: "Plainly, if it wished to sustain its official character, it was bound to respect the desire of those who have a right to stand by their prices, and who, should their established prices be disregarded, could by their public protest soon discredit the Educational Catalogue as well as those who handled it for circulation. At a time when the public mind, from causes so often discussed and lamented in these columns, is fast losing faith in sonest prices, so far as books are concerned, it so f the utmost importance that there be one official list which can be consulted with confidence by the public, as well as by the trade."

In making up special orders for the Educational Catalogue, booksellers should bear in mind that it possesses not only temporary value, but will serve its purpose during the whole year. No imprint edition of less than 100 copies can be supplied. Orders for editions should be sent to 18 at once.

The book makes an octavo of 348 pages, ranging with Publishers' Weekly or English Catalogue. The publisher reserves the right to increase the price to $5.

Subscribers to the TRADE LIST ANNUAL will please note that it is not proposed to continue in it the reprint of the Weekly Record, which is replaced in better form by the Annual Catalogue. They should therefore make sure of the latter.
